3. ———— Acknowledgment given by one partner when binding on the firm—Partnership—Practice—Parties—Same person both plaintiff and defendant. The plaintiff, as heir of his mother, sued a firm, in which he was himself a partner, to recover the amount of certain loans which he alleged that his mother in her lifetime had made to the said firm. The plaintiff was made a defendant in the suit along with the other partners. The alleged loans were made on the 2nd November 1881 and the 12th October 1882. The present suit was not filed until December 1883. The plaintiff, however, relied on an acknowledgment signed in his mother's account book by himself as partner in the firm on the 1st November 1883. The first defendant did not appear, or put in any defence. The second defendant pleaded limitation, and alleged that, on the 2nd November 1880, prior to the date of the alleged loans he had retired from the firm, and therefore was not liable. From the evidence given at the hearing it appeared that the business stopped, so far as buying and selling and fresh trading were concerned at the end of the year 1881, and that subsequently to that date the partners were occupied solely in winding up the affairs of the firm. Held, that, under the circumstances, the acknowledgment given by the plaintiff did not bind the other partners, and that the claim against them was barred. II, at the time the acknowledgment was given the firm had been a going concern, the plaintiff's authority to make such an acknowledgment on behalf of the firm might have been presumed; but in this case the business had been closed, and the partnership entirely dissolved. The presumption, therefore, which arises in active partnerships, no longer existed, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff had been expressly authorized to act for the other partners in making the acknowledgment. The meaning of the word "only" in s. 21 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), is that it must also be shown that the partner signing the acknowledgment had authority, express or implied, to do so. In a going mercantile concern such agency is to be presumed as an ordinary rule. PREMI LUDHA v. DASSA DOONGERSEY

—Suit by widow on behalf of minor son.—Son afterwards joined as plaintiff. In 1863, a Hindu widow having a minor son sued, in her own name and on her own behalf, to recover certain immovable property. The action was brought on a lease which expired in 1854. The defendant denied the lease, and contended that the suit should be dismissed, as it could not be maintained by the widow in her own name. In 1871, the son, who had in the meantime attained his majority in 1865, was made a co-plaintiff on his own application. Held, that the suit was barred, inasmuch as it must, if maintainable, be deemed to have been instituted in 1871, when the son was made a co-plaintiff, the plaint previously to that time having been in the widow's own name and expressly on her own behalf. Held, also, that making the son a co-plaintiff in 1871 could not change the character of the suit as it had existed previous to that date, so as to defeat the law of limitation. Held (by FRYER, J.), that the minor was wrongly made a plaintiff in 1871. Dharm Dass Pandey v. which they gave their joint and several promissory notes, and shortly afterwards two of the partners retired, leaving the plaintiff and the four defendants alone constituting the firm. On 27th September 1863, the plaintiff and first defendant were sentenced to transportation for life, and on 15th April 1867 one of the other defendants became insolvent. On 23rd April 1867, the liquidators of the Commercial, Finance and Stock Exchange Corporation obtained a decree against the plaintiff and the three defendants who had joined in the making of the promissory notes for the amount due on their joint and several promissory notes and costs. In March 1863, the immovable and moveable property of the plaintiff and the moveable property of the first defendant were sold in execution, and the whole of the proceeds of the plaintiff's immovable property, together with the balance of the proceeds of the moveable properties of the plaintiff and first defendant, after satisfying thereout two prior decrees against them, were applied in part satisfaction of the decree of 23rd April 1867, and the moneys so recovered were distributed to the shareholders by the liquidators, who, however, retained in their hands such portion as would have been payable in respect of the shares held by the judgment-debtors

The plaintiff therefore sued the first defendant alone on 18th March 1873 as contributory for the satisfaction of the joint decree, but subsequently, by amendment made on the 6th February 1874, added the other defendants, and prayed for a decree that he was entitled to receive and appropriate the balance of Rs. 25,212, and that the first defendant should pay to the plaintiff, the balance of the moneys paid by him

In a suit brought by the mother of these minors on their behalf against the Collector to set aside the sale, the plaintiffs impleaded also the other previous owners, of whom one was the purchaser at the sale. Two others, in their written statement, pleaded that the purchase had been made in fraud of their rights, and claimed to be still entitled to their shares in the mitta on the ground that the purchaser must be held to have purchased for their benefit (Indian Trusts Act, II of 1882, s. 90). The Judge in appeal reversed the decree and dismissed the suit as time-barred under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held, reversing the decree of the Judge and restoring that of the first Court, that s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not in itself purport to determine directly whether the joinder of the parties after the institution of a suit shall in all cases necessarily involve the bar of limitation, if the period prescribed for such a suit has then expired. Such a result must depend upon consideration of the question whether the joinder was necessary to enable the Court to award the institution of the suit as regards such freshly joined parties does not ordinarily affect the right of the original plaintiff to continue the suit and would not therefore attract the application of the general provisions of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). to the plaintiff's zamindari, it appeared that the plaintiff had led out some of the bhils to Ijaradars who had sued the defendants for the price of fish taken by them from the bhils, and that the suit had been dismissed on the ground that the defendants, in common with other inhabitants of the villages in the zamindari, had acquired a prescriptive right to fish in the bhils. The defendants contended that they had been in possession of the bhils for more than twelve years, and that they had a prescriptive right to fish therein, under a custom according to which all the inhabitants of the zamindari had the right of fishing. Held, that the mere fact that the

10. — Prescription—Effect of illustrations On the 6th of April 1878, the plaintiffs sued for obstructing a right of way for boats in the rainy season. The defendants admitted the obstruction, but denied the right of way. The plaintiffs proved that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed, and actually used by them, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, from before 1853 down to November 1875, since when no actual user of the way by the plaintiffs had taken place. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had made no actual use of the way within two years previous to the institution of the suit. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that, notwithstanding Act XV of 1877, a. 26, illus. of the right claimed. For the plaintiff to succeed years, there must, when there is no user for a long time, be circumstances from which the Court can infer the continuance of enjoyment as of right over the whole statutory period, and the cessation of the user must be at least consistent with such continuance. The enjoyment required by the Act cannot be in abeyance, and at the same time continue so as to give the plaintiff the special right claimed. The question of continued enjoyment is an inference to be drawn from facts, rather than one of fact, and if there are no facts to sustain the inference, a decision in favour of such enjoyment cannot stand. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for the declaration of a right of way, as acquired under a. 26 of the Limitation Act, over a plot of land belonging to the defendant. It was alleged that in April 1892 the defendant dispossessed the plaintiffs from the dominant tenement; and that the plaintiffs sued the defendant for recovery of possession of it under a. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and, having obtained a decree, got possession on the 19th June 1893. It was further alleged that thereupon the defendant, on the 21st June 1893, obstructed the disputed way by erecting sheds. The present suit was instituted on the 25th November 1893. Held, that, the enjoyment of the right of way on the part of the plaintiffs not having continued until within two years of the institution of the suit, the suit must fail. *Koylash Chunder Ghose v. In 1867 a suit was brought by the father of the present first plaintiff against a third party for the recovery of the land. The present defendant was not a party to that suit. In 1874, in execution of the decree in that suit, passed in favour of the plaintiff therein, the Subordinate Court appointed a Commissioner to make a local investigation and submit a report showing the land to be delivered to the plaintiff therein. The Commissioner personally inspected the land and, in his report, mentioned that the present defendant, though not a party to that suit, raised the objection that the boundaries fixed by the Commissioner of the land to be delivered to the plaintiff therein included land belonging to the present defendant. The report was considered by the Subordinate Judge, but the present defendant apparently did not appear before him, and the Subordinate Judge heard the parties to that suit and confirmed the plan prepared by the Commissioner and ordered delivery to be given to the plaintiff in that suit of the land shown in the plan. That order was modified by the District Court and in 1877 a decree of delivery was given to the

In 1889, the present suit was instituted by the son of the plaintiff in the former suit (and another) to recover possession of the same piece of land, when it was objected for the defendant that, though the delivery of the land in 1877 might be operative as a transfer of possession to the decree-holder as against the Plaintiff, a son of the last sole trustee by his senior wife, now sued a grand-son of the last sole trustee, whose father was also a son by the senior wife, to enforce his turn of management by the institution. Since 1882, plaintiff had been managing, not only during the years of his own turn, but also during the years of the turns of the members of the junior branch, who, plaintiff alleged, had transferred their turns to him. 15. ———— Suit for pre-emption—Possession. On the 10th December 1876, A gave T a mortgage of his share in a certain village. The terms of the mortgage were that A should remain in possession of his share and pay the interest on the mortgage money annually to the mortgagee, who, in the event of default in payment of the interest, was empowered to sue for actual possession of the share. On the 19th May 1877, T's name was substituted for that of A in the proprietary registers in respect of the share. On the 8th February 1878, G sued T and A to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the share, alleging that his cause of action arose on the 19th May 1877, and that A, notwithstanding the mutation of names, was still in possession. T alleged that he had been in possession since the execution and registration of the deed of mortgage. Held, that, whether T had been in plenary possession of the share since the date of the deed, or whether he had had only such constructive or partial possession of it as was involved in the receipt of interest on the

On the 17th January 1885, this last-mentioned co-sharer brought a suit against the vendors and the vendees to enforce his right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz in respect of the shares sold in the three villages. Held, that in the case of the meaning of art. 10, sch. II of the Limitation Act. In a statute, such as the law of limitation, which contemplates notice, express or implied, to the party to be affected by some act done by another in respect of which a right accrues to him to impeach it and as to which time begins to run against him quoad his remedy from a particular point, the word "physical" implies some corporeal or perceptible act done which of itself conveys or ought to convey to the mind of a person notice that his right has been prejudiced. An equity of redemption is not susceptible of possession of this description under a sale by which it is transferred and a pre-emptor impeaching such a sale has one year from the date of registration of the instrument of sale within which to bring his suit. Held, therefore, that the period of limitation began to run from the date of the registration of the deed of sale and that the suit was within time. *SIIDAN SUNDEN v. The defendant intervened in 1878, and set up a previous purchase of the house by himself from the plaintiff. The attachment was removed. The judgment-creditor brought a suit against the defendant for a declaration that the property belonged to the plaintiff, and as such was liable to be attached and sold in execution. At the hearing of this suit the judgment-creditor did not appear. The defendant appeared and produced a sa'e-deed, which the Court found proved, and dismissed the judgment-creditor's suit. The plaintiff now brought the present suit against the defendant to recover possession of the house. It was contended for the defendant that the plaintiff, as the judgment-debtor, might at any rate be regarded as a party against whom the order in the execution proceedings in 1878 was made, and that the present suit was therefore barred by limitation. Held, that the plaintiff could not be regarded as a party to those proceedings. Hence the period of limitation for such regular suit is that provided by cl. 12, s. 1, Act XIV of 1859, namely, twelve years, and not one year as provided by cl. 5 of the same section. His order was reversed, on appeal, by the District Judge, who held that Art. 14, Sch. II of Act IX of 1871, applied to the case, and that the suit was barred. The intention of the Legislature in passing s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) was that the order made under that section should be a final bar to the plaintiff's right, unless such a suit as that section prescribed, was brought to re-try the question of that right; and if on such action being brought, the Court on the trial held that the plaintiff had established his right, its ruling would amount to a reversal of the order made under s. 246, and the suit would fall within Art. 15 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), which is substituted for the limitation provided by the twelve repealed words in s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859. *Sethappan v. Arts. 18, 120—Land taken under Land Acquisition Act—Refusal by Collector to give award—Possession taken by Government. Land had been taken under the Land Acquisition Act, possession having been taken by the Collector before an award was made. The Collector subsequently refused to give an award, on the ground that the land belonged to Government. More than one year after the Collector's refusal to give an award the present suit was instituted for a declaration that the land belonged to the plaintiffs and for recovery of possession or in the alternative for damages for the wrongful refusal of the Collector to give the award. The finding was that the land was the plaintiff's; but the plea of limitation was raised:—Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation. The land had vested absolutely in Government, and so plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession, but could only claim damages for breach of a statutory duty on the Collector's part. The suit contemplated by Art. 18 of the Limitation Act is one for compensation for non-completion and that article does not apply to a case in which the land has vested in Government. The defendant, on the 18th of February 1898, attached, in execution of his decree, certain country soap as being the property of his judgment-debtor. The plaintiff intervened, claiming the soap as his, and his objection was allowed. The defendant thereupon instituted a suit, under s. 233 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for declaration of the title of his judgment-debtor, but was defeated, and his appeal in that suit was dismissed on the 23rd of March, 1899. At the time of the institution of this suit, the defendant applied for and obtained an injunction directing that the soap should not be made over to the plaintiff. Ultimately the plaintiff, on the 17th of June, 1899, after the dismissal of the defendant's appeal, obtained possession of the soap. He then sued the defendant to recover damages for the loss of part and the deterioration of the rest of the soap while under the defendant's attachment.—Held, that Art. 42, and Art. 29, of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applied, and that the suit was not barred by limitation *Ido Mian v. In 1890 the Survey Officer, purporting to act under s. 20 of the Bombay Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880), decided that defendants were occupancy tenants, but the plaintiffs did not come to know of this decision till 1893, when the botkhat was prepared and signed. Shortly afterwards the plaintiffs took forcible possession of the lands. Thereupon the defendants filed a suit in the Mamlatdar's Court to recover possession, alleging that they were owners of the land, and that they had been illegally dispossessed. The Mamlatdar restored them to possession. In 1896 plaintiffs filed the present suit to eject defendants. Defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was bad for want of notice to quit, and that the claim was time-barred:—Held, that the suit was within time, the cause of action having accrued in 1893, when the botkhat was prepared, and not in 1890, when the Survey Officer passed his decision. MAHFAT RANK v. In October 1870, B, a tenant of the land, obtained an injunction against R restraining him from interfering with his (B's) possession in a possessory suit which was filed in the Mamlatdar's Court in May 1876. In July 1877, P obtained a decree on his mortgage, and in execution he got possession of the property from R (the mortgagor) in June 1879. The plaintiff who was the assignee of both P and R (mortgagee and mortgagor), sued B in ejectment in September 1883. Both the lower Courts allowed the claim. On second appeal by B, the plaintiff (inter alia) contended that, having taken an assignment of the mortgage from the mortgagee, he was not bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1876 against the mortgagor. But held that, when the plaintiff, having previously taken an assignment of P's mortgage, purchased the equity of redemption from R, the mortgage was extinguished, there being no circumstance from which an intention could be presumed to keep it alive. The plaintiff could not stand in a better position than R, and was bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court, notwithstanding that he had taken an assignment of P's mortgage. In those proceedings the defendant had claimed a right of permanent possession as against R, and the effect of the Mamlatdar's order was to continue him in possession until ejected by the decree of a Civil Court. It was therefore incumbent upon R to bring a suit within three years from the Mamlatdar's order, as provided by Art. 46, Sch. II of the Limitation Act* of which the defendant executed a rent-note to the plaintiffs promising to give up the property to the plaintiffs at the end of four months on payment by the plaintiffs of Rs 100. The District Judge dismissed the suit, as barred by limitation, under Art. 47, Sch II of the Limitation Act, not having been brought within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's order of 28th February 1893. Held, also, that the contract between the parties dissolved the order of the Mamlatdar in the possessory suit and rendered it unnecessary for the plaintiffs to sue to set it aside. It was contended that the suit was time-barred under Art. 47, Sch II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), it being not brought within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's order. —Held, that the suit was not time-barred under Art. 47, Sch II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), because the first suit in the Mamlatdar's Court was brought by the plaintiff in his personal and private capacity, while the second suit was brought by him as manager and on behalf of the math. In connection with the property of a math there are two distinct classes of suits, those in which the manager seeks to enforce his private and personal rights and those in which he seeks to vindicate the rights of the math. Where property is seized by a Magistrate, the property passes into legal custody and such custody is for the benefit of the rightful owner. Time begins to run against such owner only when by an erroneous order of the Magistrate the property is delivered to some other persons and it is so even when such other person had been in wrongful possession previous to the seizure by the Magistrate. Mudvirappa Kulkarni v Pokirappa Kenari, 1 L R 7 Bom. 427, distinguished. *KAMASWAMY AYYAR v. from the defendants the sum of Rs. 2,611-3-6 as found credited to their account in 1880 by the defendants' father, with whom the community had lodged a sum of Rs. 2,320 in 1874. They alleged that the sum was lodged on the condition that it was to be returned with interest on demand. It appeared that small sums were paid by K to the plaintiffs from time to time, and no demand had ever been made during the lifetime of K for repayment. The defendants denied the alleged condition, and contended that the suit was barred. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiffs' claim. The defendants appealed to the Assistant Judge, who reversed the decree, being of opinion that the transaction was a loan and not a deposit, and that the suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court:—Held, confirming the decree of was lodged as a deposit and not as a loan, and that Art. 60 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applied. They relied upon the following circumstances as showing the nature of the transaction:

(i) the money was deposited in a private account; (ii) that interest was to be paid upon it; (iii) that the account was to be annually settled; (iv) that it was to be withdrawn in one sum—Held, that these circumstances, if proved, did not necessarily deprive the transaction of the character of a loan by creating a fiduciary relationship between the parties (which is essential to a deposit in its technical sense), and thus distinguishing it from the ordinary dealings between native bankers and their customers. ICHHA DEANJI v. No further instalments were paid, but no demand for payment of the entire sum secured by the bond was made by the plaintiff until the 30th January 1884. Held by SPANKE, J., that Art 80, Sch. decreed to fall due—Right of decree-holder to waive his right to execute the whole decree—Waiver. A proviso in a decree made payable by instalments, by which the whole amount of the decree is to become due upon default in payment of any instalment, is a proviso enuring for the benefit of the decree-holder alone, and he is at liberty to take advantage of it or to waive it as he thinks fit. In this case it was held that he did waive his right, and therefore his right to recover the amount by instalments subsequently was not barred, limitation not running against him from the original default. *RAM COLPO BHATTACHARJI v. —Default in one instalment, the whole amount to fall due—Waiver. The mere fact that a creditor has done nothing to enforce a condition in an instrument, under which the whole debt became due on failure in the payment of one instalment, is no evidence of waiver within the meaning of Art. 75 of the Limitation Act. *NOBODIP CHUNDER SAHA v. 19. — Bond payable by instalments—Default in payment of an instalment—Waiver of a condition of forfeiture on default in payment of one instalment—Acceptance of an instalment overdue. A bond payable by instalments provided that, if default was made in paying one instalment, the whole debt should become due. The amount of the third instalment was paid five days after it became due. The lower Court found that this payment was accepted by the obligee as a payment made on account or in satisfaction of the third instalment, and not as a mere part payment on reduction of the whole debt, and that the circumstances indicated an intention to waive the forfeiture, though there was no express waiver:—Held, that the acceptance of the amount of the third instalment constituted a waiver within the meaning of Art 75 of Sch II of the Limitation Act, 1877. *NAGAPPA v. 20. — Execution of decree—Decree payable by instalments—Default—Waiver. A decree was made for payment of the decretal amount by monthly instalments running over a period of twelve years; and it was provided that on default the decree-holder might execute the decree as a whole for the balance then due. In 1883, a default was made, and in 1884 the decree-holder filed an application for execution in respect thereof, but did not proceed with it, and continued to receive the monthly instalments. In 1887, he made another application for execution, in which he relied on the same default:—Held, that the default if it was one, had been waived by the decree-holder and that such waiver was a good defence to the present application. *Mumford v. If disputes should so arise, the respective party should be answerable to the extent of his private property." A was deprived of some of the lands he got by the exchange and he sued B on the above covenant for the value of the lands, of which he was dispossessed. The rule that in actions for damages for breach of covenant of title in a sale, the breach must be held to have occurred as and from the date of sale, does not apply, when there is a special contract. The following decisions were given under the Act of 1859 :—

1. Mutual dealings—

Balance of accounts. The test of whether dealings are mutual within s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859 or not seems to be were they such that the balance was sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes of the other. It is not necessary that there should have been such a buying or selling by each of the parties, so as to constitute him a trader within the strict meaning of the term CHASSEERAN v. MONOHUR DOSS. 11 Ind. Jur. N. S. 241

2. Mutual dealings—

Mutual payment and receipt of money. Where each party paid money to the other, and received from the other an equivalent in bills, they were held to have had mutual dealings. LUCRINE KARAIN v. CHOONUN MEAH. 14 W. R. 184

3. Mutual dealings—

Balance of account, suit for. In a suit for the balance of an account with interest the Court was

4. Mutual dealings—

Co-sharers accounting for rents. The rule that mutual accounts, if they contain some item or items within twelve years, will not be barred by limitation, though the rest of the items be beyond time is confined to accounts between two parties which show a reciprocity of dealings, or, in other words to transactions in which there is a mutual credit founded on a subsisting debt, or an express or implied agreement for a set-off of mutual debts. AHMED REZA v. ENAYET HOSSEIN. W. R. 1864, 235

5. Account between principal and agent—

Mutual accounts. An agreement between a principal and his agent to keep mutual accounts was held to be a contract within the meaning of s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859. WATSON v. AGA MEHDEE SHERAZIFF. L. R. 11 A. 346

6. Mutual dealing—

Item showing continuance of account. The effect of down the mutual dealings to March 1868. The agent sued in February, 1871 to recover the balance due to him on the account. Held, that the case within s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859, and was not barred by limitation even as to the items which were dated more than three years before the institution of the suit. WATSON v. AGA MEHDEE SHERAZIFF. L. R. 11 A. 346

7. Mutual accounts—

Suit for balance of account. Art. 85, Sch. II. of Act XV of 1877, is intended to apply to cases where an account has been going on between two parties

s. 8, Act XIV of 1859, is that nothing in an account of mutual dealings between merchants and traders is to be barred, provided that there is an item indicating the continuance of such dealings proved to have occurred within the period of limitation. HIRADA BASAPPA v. GADIGI MUDDAPA. 6 Mad. 142

To constitute a mutual account there must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely transactions which create obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations. Thus an account consisting of entries of payments made by one party in reduction of his debt to the other, and of payments made by the latter on behalf of the former party for the same purpose, is not a mutual account within the meaning of Art. 85 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act. Hirada Basappa v. Gadigi Muddapa. 6 Mad. 142 transactions several of the acceptances were well honoured by the defendant, and the plaintiffs, at his request, allowed him to renew the bills. Some renewals took place in August and September 1864. In March, May, and July 1866, the defendant made purchases from the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs made purchases from the defendant. The plaintiffs were in the habit of closing their accounts on 30th June in each year. In an action for balance of account brought on 24th February 1870—Held, that the parties were merchants and traders having mutual dealings under s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859. The year mentioned in s. 8 of Act XIV of 1859 is intended to be reckoned from the time when the balance of accounts is struck. In this case that was the 30th June 1867; the suit, therefore, was not barred. Quære: What would be the operation of the section in those cases in which the merchant or trader balances his accounts at the lapse of a period of less than one year? SINGH DAS v. 10. Balance of account—Mutual dealings : Plaintiff had an account with a banking firm of which the defendant was a member. On the dissolution of this firm, plaintiff made up his accounts debiting the defendant with a share of the amount due to him from the firm and afterwards he carried on business with the plaintiff separately. It did not appear that any settlement had been made between the parties from the time of the dissolution of the firm down to the filing of the plaint, or that the defendant had assented to portion of the firm's debt being carried to his separate account. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover this sum with interest, as an item of a mutual, open, and current account where there had been cross-demands between the parties. The manager of A, the proprietress of an indigo factory, on the 20th December 1869, paid into the kothi or bank of B, a banker, the sum of Rs. 1,200 to the credit of A, and from that time onwards sums of money were drawn by A's manager out of B's bank, and ap-

was the last occasion that any balance was due from B to A. Payments continued to be made on behalf of A into B's bank up to the 12th of June 1873, when a sum of Rs. 1,081-8 was paid into her account; but, notwithstanding this payment, the balance of account was on that date against her. After the 12th of June 1873, B continued to make payments on behalf of A, and also to render monthly accounts in which he charged A with such payments, and also with the principal of, and interest upon, the balance due on previously-rendered accounts. This continued till the month of January 1874, when B for the last time rendered a monthly account to A, the last item in which was a payment made on the 6th January 1874. On the 23rd December 1876, B instituted a suit against A to recover the balance of principal and interest due to him on the footing of the last account rendered by him to A : —Held, that the account between A and B was not, and never had been, a mutual, open, and current account, and that the suit was therefore barred.

that there had been at any time a mutual, open, and current account between them, that mutual relation terminated on the 2nd July 1872, or if not, then on the 12th June 1873, when the last payment was made on A's account into B's bank. MARONED v ASHROBUNISSA . I. L. R. 5 Calc. 759

Limitation Act, 1877, s. 19—Acknowledgment of debt contained in unrequited document—Admissibility of document as evidence of acknowledgment The nature of the pecuniary transactions between B and G were such that sometimes a balance was due to the one and sometimes to the other. On the 1st October 1875 there was a balance due to B. During the ensuing year, as computed in the account, G made payments to B exceeding such balance. On the 19th November 1878 a balance of Rs. 600 was found to be due from G to B. On the 11th December 1878, G executed a conveyance of certain land to B, for which such debt was partly the consideration. In such conveyance G acknowledged his liability in respect of such debt. He died before such conveyance was registered and it did not operate. On the 18th November 1879, B sued G's widow for such debt;—Held, that such conveyance was admissible as evidence of the acknowledgment by G of his liability for such debt notwithstanding such conveyance was not registered; that applying Art. 85, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877, such debt was not barred by limitation when such acknowledgment was made; and that, if that article was not applicable, but the period of limitation began to run from the time each item comprising such debt became a debt, still such debt would not have been barred when such acknowledgment was made as the debt with which the year computed from the 1st October 1875 opened was extinguished by payments made by G in the course of that year. KPUSHALO v. BHARI LAL . I. L. R. 9 All. 523

15. Mutual current account—Reciprocal demands. A employed B as his agent. B alone kept written debit and credit accounts. A sued B for a balance due on the account between them.—Held, that the debit and credit account showed reciprocal demands between plaintiff and defendants, and that the account was a mutual, open and current account within the

16. Mutual, open and current accounts. A sued as commission agent for B and C. A furnished a debit and credit account in February 1878. The account was disputed, and the matter was referred to arbitration; for which purpose in March 1880 a "memorandum of items to be settled" was drawn up and signed by B and C, in which they denied that any balance would be found due to A, but acknowledged that accounts must be taken, and that they would be liable if any balance were found due to A. In June 1880 B signed and supplied to the arbitrator an account on behalf of himself and C. The arbitrator made an award which was set aside. A filed a suit against B and C in September 1882 for the balance due to him.—Held, that the accounts were mutual, open and current accounts, and that the suit was not barred by limitation. *SITAYYA v. 17. Mutual account—Test of mutuality—Shifting balance. The dealings between the plaintiff and defendant consisted of and credited in their accounts. The account, from 1884 to 1890. In 1892 the plaintiff sued to recover the balance due to him in respect of all these dealings. The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was barred by limitation.—Held, that the account was a mutual, open and current account within the meaning of Art. 85 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The fact that be mutual must be transactions and the balance.

Art. 86 (1871, art. 88)—Suit to recover amount due on policy of insurance—Cause of action—Notice of loss. A suit for the recovery of the amount due on a policy of marine insurance fell under cl. 10 of Act XIV of 1859. In such cases the limitation (in the absence of a custom allowing a certain time of grace) begins to run from the date when the defendant has notice of the loss, and refuses or neglects to pay. *NAROTANDAS BHAGTANDBAS v. was instituted on the 23rd November 1875. On the 25th of the same month, A, learning that B was about to dispose of his property, caused a notice to issue to him directing him not to transfer any of his property. This notice was served on B on the 29th November. On the 1st December 1875 B transferred certain land to T by way of sale. K's suit was dismissed by the lower Courts, but the High Court, on the 7th August 1876, gave him a decree:—Certain property belonging to B was sold in execution of this decree, but the sale-proceeds were not sufficient to satisfy the amount due on the decree. K thereupon, on the 1st July 1879, sued T to cancel the conveyance to him by B on the ground that it was fraudulent and without consideration. Held, that the words in Art. 91, Sch. It might have been that the agreement for sale was not void from the beginning, but was only void upon objection being made; and if it was only voidable, the consideration did not fail at once at the time of the receipt of the purchase-money, so as to render it money had and received to the use of the payer within the meaning of Art. 62 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877. But it failed at all events, when the purchaser being opposed found himself unable to obtain possession. He would have had a right to sue at that time to recover his purchase-money upon a failure of consideration. And, therefore, the case appeared to fall within Art. 97. Plaintiff was then obliged to sue for possession, when it was found that the sale did not bind the son's interest, and on grounds of convenience plaintiff was awarded the value of defendant's share instead of a decree for partition. He now sued to recover the balance of the price paid, and it was contended that the suit was, in fact, one for damages for breach of the contract to convey, and as such was barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as the damages claimed could have been sued for in the alternative in the previous suit for specific performance.—Held, that the suit was not barred; it being, in fact, for the recovery of money paid on a consideration that had failed, and the cause of action being different from that in the suit for specific performance. Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as the failure of consideration must be taken to have occurred

The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for specific performance. On appeal by the defendants it was held by the High Court, (i) that the terms of the agreement to sell not being satisfactorily proved, no decree for specific performance could be made; (ii) that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to get back the money which he had paid under the agreement; and (iii) that the plaintiff's alternative claim for a refund on failure of consideration was governed as to limitation by Art. 97 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, and was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as limitation only began to run from the date of the High Court's decree declaring the agreement to sell to be unenforceable.

2. ———— Specific performance—Trust—Laches. In 1860 certain shares in a company then formed were allotted to S on the understanding, as the plaintiffs alleged, that 120 of such shares should, on the amount thereof being paid to S, be transferred to and registered in the books of the company in the names of the plaintiffs. In 1862 the plaintiffs completed the payment to S in respect of the shares, and during his lifetime received dividends in respect of the said shares. S died in 1870, leaving a will, probate of which was granted to the defendant as his executor. In a suit, brought by the plaintiffs, after demand of the shares from the defendant, and refusal by him to deliver them, to compel the defendant to transfer the shares to the plaintiffs, and register the same in their names, the plaintiffs' case was that the shares had been held in trust for them, and that consequently their suit was not barred by lapse of time. —Held, that the transaction between S and the plaintiffs did not amount to "a trust for any specific purpose" within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act, or to a trust at all, but to an agreement of which the plaintiffs were entitled to specific performance; and the limitation applicable was that provided by Art. 113 of Sch. II, Act IX of 1871, and therefore the suit was not barred. Nor were the plaintiffs disentitled to relief by reason of any laches or delay in bringing the suit. Ahmed Mahomed Patel v. Adjeev Dooly

The general period of limitation of six years under cl. 16 of s. 1 of the Act of 1859 was necessarily much wider in its application than is Art. 120 of the present Act, so many more suits being now specially provided for. There was under the Act of 1859 a difference of three years in the period of limitation applicable to contracts registered and that applicable to unregistered contracts which could have been registered, the period being six years for the former, and three years for the latter. Suits on contracts which could not have been registered were considered as cases not specially provided for, and held to be governed by the general limitation of six years.

54. ———— Suit by the purchaser in execution-sale to recover the purchase money. The plaintiff purchased land sold in execution of a decree in favour of the defendant, but was subsequently evicted by the son of the judgment debtor. He then sued in 1889 to recover the purchase-money paid by him on ground that the judgment-debtor possessed no saleable interest in the property in question. It appeared that in 1888 the son of the judgment-debtor had obtained a decree against the plaintiff and others declaring that she (the judgment-debtor) had no saleable interest in the property.—Held, that Limitation Act, Sch. The decree provided for payment of the secured debt in various instalments by May 1895. The mortgagor died in 1883, having discharged part of the debt. The decree-holder having attached certain family property in execution, the mortgagor's two younger sons, who had not been born at the date of the above decree, objected that their shares were not liable to attachment. This objection prevailed, the Court expressing the opinion that the matter in controversy should be determined in a regular suit. The other defendants in the suit of 1877 had both died in the interval, one of them leaving infant sons. The decree-holder (in whose sole name the mortgage stood) now sued the sons of the mortgagor and their infant nephews in 1891 for the payment out of the family property of all the unpaid instalments. —Held, that the period of limitation applicable to the suit was six years, and that time began to run for the purposes of limitation from the date when each instalment would have become due from the deceased judgment-debtor, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for payment out of the family property of all such instalments as would have so become due at the date of the suit, and for a declaration on only as to the subsequent instalments. *RAMAYYA v. questions arising in the suit being such as should have been determined in execution of the decree, and not by a separate suit. JOGHMAYA DASSI v. THACKERMONT DASSI I. L. R. 24 Cal. 473

1. Suit under will for sum as legacy. Where a sum assigned to sons was, by the terms of the will, to be regarded as a legacy, and not as a charge on the estate for their maintenance:—Held, that cl. 11, s. 1, Act XIV of 1839, was the limitation applicable to suits under the will for recovery of the sum due as a legacy. NANA NARAIN RAO v. RAMA NUND ■ Agra 171

2. Suit for legacy. R by his will gave the whole of his property to his brothers, making a specific provision of Rs. 4,000 for one of his daughters (the mother of the plaintiffs), which was to remain as amount in the family treasury, yielding her interest if and till she gave birth to a male child, when she should also have 200 bighas of land. Shortly after this, the testator died and the elder of the plaintiffs was born. The mother having since died without drawing the principal or taken the allotment of land, and the manager of the family estate having refused to give the plaintiffs their due, they sued to recover what was left to their mother. Held that the suit was barred.

3. Will—Suit for share of testator's moveable property. Art. 122 of Act IX of 1871 applies to a suit for a share of the residue of a testator's moveable property disposed of by his will. THELPOORASOONDERY DOSSEE v. DEBENDRONATH TAGORE I. L. R. 2 Cal. 45

4. Suit for legacy against representative of testator. Art. 123 of the Limitation Act only applies to cases in which the property sought to be recovered is not only a legacy, but is also sought to be recovered as such from a person who is bound by law to pay such legacy, either because he is the executor of the will or otherwise represent the estate of the testator. *ISSUR CHUNDER DASS v. to recover her share of Government promissory notes being stridhanam of her mother who died in 1880. The property in question had been in the possession of the defendant.

6. Suit for legacy under a will—Cause of action—Amendment of plaint. A suit was brought in May 1894 by a legatee claiming under the will of a testator, who died on the 8th December 1881, against the executors of the will. The plaint did not specifically ask for payment of the legacy or for ascertainment of the share in the residue due to the plaintiff, but set forth certain allegations as to the conduct of the defendant.

and dismissed it as being barred. On appeal to the High Courts—Held, that the plaint should have been amended in order to show clearly that the plaintiff really was trying to recover his legacy from the defendants personally and that therefore the suit fell within Art. 123.

7. Non-claim of share under an intestacy. One M N W died intestate in 1837, leaving a widow (J) and two sons. M obtained letters of administration, and until her death in 1897 remained in sole possession and enjoyment of her husband's estate although by law entitled only to a widow's share, the two sons being entitled to the whole.

8. Suit by a Mapilla widow for her share in her husband's property. The widow of a Mapilla, who had died intestate more than fourteen years before suit, sued to recover a

B.—Suit to recover ratan allowance In 1861 N B, the owner of a share in a deshpande ratan, died childless and intestate. A certificate of administration under Regulation VII of 1827 was granted to one G, a distant relation, who received N B's share in the ratan up to and including the year 1871. In the meantime, viz., on the 19th November 1870, two nearer relations, D and S, succeeded in getting G's certificate cancelled, and obtained a certificate to themselves jointly. In 1876 the Collector recognized D alone as the heir of N B, and paid D's son S the share of the deceased N B with arrears from 1872. After S's death, his son N (defendant No. 1) received it down to the year 1884. In 1893 K (father of plaintiff No. 1) got the certificate of 1870 cancelled and obtained a certificate to himself jointly with defendant No. 1. K died, and the plaintiffs (his son and nephew) brought this suit claiming to be co-sharers in the one anna and four pies share of N B. The defendants contended inter alia that the suit was barred. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiffs' claim for the three years previous to the suit, and rejected the rest of the claim. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who held that the plaintiffs' claim was totally barred under Art. 123 of the Limitation Act.

no cause of action until N B and his successors in title D and S were recognized by the Collector and paid the arrears of the hak. G was quite independent of them, and this recognition did not take place until 1876—less than twelve years before the institution of the plaintiffs' suit

In a Madras case, however, the six years' period was held to apply.

The Court of first instance decreed for plaintiff. The Civil Court reversed this decision on the ground that title to the office was the principal matter of the plaintiff's claim and the right to possession of the land merely an incident dependent upon that title; that therefore as the period of limitation applicable to the former claim (six years) had elapsed before the institution of the suit, it was not maintainable for the land. Upon special appeal, the decree of the Civil Court was affirmed on the grounds that it was conclusively found that the land was inseparably attached to the office as a source of endowment for the services of the holder of it for the time being, and that, as against the plaintiff, the defendant was protected in the possession of the office by cl 16, s. 1, Act XIV of 1859. *TAMMIRAZU RAMZOOI v. leaving two sons, of whom one, who died in 1803, was the father of the plaintiff. The founder's elder son, C, died in 1816, leaving two sons (M, who died in 1840, and L, who died in 1847) and two daughters (A and the defendant's mother). The office of dharmakarta descended from the founder to C. After his death a manager was appointed by the Collector, and C's son M was dispossessed by his uncle T, and in 1834 M brought a suit in equity against T and his sons. Pending the final decree, M was appointed by the Supreme Court to act as dharmakarta. A decree was never passed, and the suit abated on M's death in 1840. M was succeeded in the office of dharmakarta by his brother L, who held it till 1847, when he died, leaving it by will to his sister A and her husband R jointly. R died soon after, and A in 1872, leaving the office by will to her sister's son, the defendant. In a suit by plaintiff, as eldest sur-bequeathing the office to his sister A and her husband R was an act unequivocally hostile to the rights of the male members of the family; and as the will was at once acted upon, they must have had notice of this invasion of their rights. MAMALLY CENNA KESHAVARAYA v. VAIDELINGA

He died childless and his widow succeeded him as trustee. She continued to manage the affairs of the temple until October 1885, when she transferred the right of trusteeship together with certain temple properties to the first defendant. In 1897 the widow died. 39. — Hindu law—Joint family—Joint estate—Partition—Portion of estate reserved undivided—Possession of reserved portion by one member of family—Adverse possession—Possession, inference arising from—Burden of proof—Res judicata as between defendants. The plaintiffs sued for part of a house as a portion of joint family property left undivided on the occasion of a general partition which had taken place about thirty-five years before the suit. The defendant had since then been in sole possession and enjoyment of the house in dispute. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove participation in possession or enjoyment within twelve years. On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that, as no share had been demanded or refused, the defendant's decision of the subordinate judge, and remanded the case for re-trial on the merits. On appeal to the High Court.—Held, that the suit was barred. The fact that the house in question had admittedly remained undivided did not prevent the operation of the Limitation Act, and Art. 127 of Act XV of 1877 applied. That Article applies equally to a portion of joint family property left undivided as to the whole estate, and a twelve years' exclusion known to the excluded sharer, binds him in the one case as in the other. What would bar the operation of the Article in question would be a reserve of a part of the joint estate from partition and a possession of that portion conceded to, and taken by, one of the sharers as the common property of himself and the other sharers. *Ramchandra Narayan v. sanad issued in the usual terms as prescribed by Regulation XXV of 1802. J died in 1864, leaving four sons, the three plaintiffs and D, his eldest son. D died in 1869 leaving an only son, the infant defendant. In 1869 the Court of Wards took charge of the estate on behalf of the infant defendant and allowed his uncle, plaintiff No. 1, to receive the rents of the zamindari as renter. The infant defendant and his three uncles lived in the same house and participated in the joint family property until 1872, when the plaintiffs claimed to have the zamindari divided. By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the Court of Wards all the moveable and immoveable property, except the zamindari talukh, was divided into four shares and distributed in 1874 between the plaintiffs and defendants. In 1884 the plaintiffs sued for partition of the zamindari, alleging that their cause of action arose in 1872, when the Court of Wards denied their right to a partition of the zamindari talukh. The plaintiff and his four brothers (G, S, R, and B) were members of a joint Hindu family. The only one of them who lived at home was S. In 1854 the family property, which had been mortgaged, was redeemed by the brothers, and after redemption it was placed under the management of S by the eldest brother G. Subsequently, two of the brothers visited resided in the family house with S and G. In 1872 G died. The plaintiff alleged that in 1876 he demanded his share, but was refused. In 1883 he filed this suit for partition. It was contended that the right of the plaintiff had become barred by the Limitation Act (XIV of 1859) and was not revived by Act XV of 1877, which was in force at the date the suit was brought. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal the Assistant Judge reversed the decree of the Court below, holding that under cl. 13 of s. 1 of the Limitation Act (XIV of 1859) the plaintiff had his right to sue, and that such right could not be revived by the passing of the subsequent Limitation Acts (IX of 1871 and XV of 1877). He was of opinion that the fact that the plaintiff's wife "had put up at S's house for a few days, if it were a fact, did not help the plaintiff's title".—Held, by the High Court following Ahmed

Two of the brothers effected a settlement of accounts with the uncle with reference to the profits of the estate; the share of the three brothers was appropriated; and the money representing that share was deposited with the uncle. Subsequently the two who had effected the settlement withdrew their portion of the common share, and the third brother sued the uncle to recover a sum of money as his one-third portion. That section was repealed by Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 1, and although the latter section was repealed by Act XIV of 1870, the former was not restored, there being no express provision in Act XIV of 1870 to revive it, as required by the General Clauses Act (I of 1863, s. 3). The question of the period for which interest was to be allowed was therefore to be determined by Act XV of 1877, the Act in force at the date of the institution of this suit, Art. 132 of which applied; but as the rule of damdupat is not affected by Limitation Act, the defendants could not be allowed as interest more than the amount of the principal on which it was to be paid.

On 9th May 1872, M's son, who was then still in possession representing himself to be the owner, mortgaged the property with possession to defendant No. 2 and S, the grandfather of defendant No. 3. These defendants sued upon their mortgage of May 1872, and obtained a decree and sold the property in 1881 in execution, purchasing it themselves. Defendant No. 3 subsequently sold his share to defendant No. 4. In 1892 the plaintiff sued the first defendant (the grandson of the original mortgagee M under the mortgage of 1842) for redemption, making defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 party defendants. The defendants contended that they were purchasers for value, and that the suit was barred by Art. 134 of the Limitation Act:—Held, that the suit was not barred, and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. By the sale in 1881, the interest of defendant No. 1 became vested in them. The plaintiff could then have redeemed them on paying off the amount due under the mortgage of 1842, disregarding the mortgage of 9th May 1872 altogether. But when the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had held possession under that mortgage for sion without redeeming it also. The purchase by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 at the auction-sale in 1881 could not avail them, as the present suit was brought within twelve years from that date. 24. Adverse possession—Cause of action—Title—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9. The plaintiffs having been dispossessed of certain lands by the defendants in 1891 and 1896 in execution of decrees under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, instituted this suit in 1901 to recover possession of those lands. The suit was dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that the claim was barred by limitation, the plaintiffs having failed to prove possession within 12 years antecedent to the institution of the suit. Held, that, if the title was with the plaintiffs, their possession during the interval between the time when they ousted the defendants and the time when the latter recovered possession by virtue of the decrees under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, should be regarded as the possession of the rightful owner, and not of trespassers, and therefore there would

The plaintiff sued for confirmation of his title to, and for possession of, a jote in the Nowabad mehal deriving his title under a pottah from the ijaradar. The defendant's case was that he had bought the lands as a talukh, and been in possession accordingly; but finding that the lands had been surveyed as a part of the Nowabad mehal, he took a pottah from the ijaradar four years previous to the plaintiff's pottah. The defendant's pottah was found to be a forgery.—Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action arose solely from the title set up by the defendant under the pottah derived from the ijaradar, and not from the date when the defendant purchased the lands as a talukh. *SHAHABOODEEN v. He further contended that the plaintiff's claim to the property was barred by limitation, it having been in possession of himself (the defendant) and L for more than twelve years before this suit was filed.—Held, that the suit was barred by limitation (Art. 144 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877), the defendant having been in adverse possession of the property for more than twelve the defendant's adoption, L had been either actually or constructively in exclusive possession of the property, such possession being distinctly adverse both to the plaintiff, so far as he claimed to be the adopted son, and to C, so far as she might claim to represent him during his minority. The question of limitation then depended on whether the defendant could supplement his own adverse possession since his adoption (which was deficient by two days) by the adverse possession of L, and this again therefore became barred in 1878. PADAJIRAO v. RAMRAV . . . I L R 13 Bom. 180

In 1857 the plaintiff, who succeeded B in the management of the muth, brought the present suit against the defendant, who was the vendee of B, to recover possession of the lands or to recover assessment for three years previous to the suit. In the year 1867 the survey settlement having been introduced under Bombay Act I of 1865, D refused to pass the annual kabulat. Government thereupon put the village under attachment, which was, however, removed in the year 1878 on his passing the required kabulat. The management of the village was restored to him and certain surplus profits were handed over to him by Government. In the year 1881 P sold his share in the khots to S, who brought a suit against D and his brother to recover a half share of the abovementioned profits. D resisted the claim, denying that either P or his assignee had any right to the khots or to share in the khots profits. The suit was dismissed on a technical ground. Subsequently in the years 1881 and 1884, D got decrees against the actual tenants declaring that the lands, the subject-matter of the present suit, were his dhara lands, and in accordance with those decrees the revenue authorities made corresponding entries in the revenue records. In the year 1888-89 S passed a kabulat as a half sharer in the khots, and enjoyed the khots profits for one year. Afterwards plaintiff No 1, one of S's sons who died in the meanwhile, having passed the annual kabulat in 1892-93 and again in 1894-95 and having failed during both the years to recover khots profits from the lands in dispute, he filed the present suit in August 1895 for a declaration that the lands were khots, and that the defendants had fraudulently got them entered in the revenue records as dhara. The plaintiff stated that they learnt of the defendant's fraud in the year 1895, and sought to recover

In 1883 they sued the defendants, who were in possession to recover what had been part of the family estate, alleging title according to the Mitakshara. A question whether the plaintiffs were not barred by limitation depended on whether the now disputed part of the family property had not been from the year 1843 in the adverse possession of the widow of one of their great uncles. This widow, after transferring that part of the property to a person through whom the defendants made title, died in 1886. She was the widow of the elder of two brothers, the last co-parceners of the family, who, being sons of the said ancestor, had at one time held the family estate. This elder brother, her husband, died in 1826. His younger brother survived him, and, having taken the whole estate by survivorship, died in 1833, leaving a widow, who died in 1843. The latter widow, having inherited the estate from her husband for her life-estate, there being no co-parcener left, gave a share of her inheritance to the abovementioned widow of the elder brother. So assigned, the property remained, with the addition in 1843 of the share which the younger brother's widow had kept for herself, in the possession of the other widow, the one first abovementioned. After many years, this widow transferred it to her own brother, of whom the present defendants were the heirs and representatives. It was decided below that it had not been in the right of a Hindu widow taking by inheritance from her husband that the elder brother's widow had obtained, and had dealt with, the property. A widow's estate for life never constituted a possession adverse to the reversionary heir, but here the widow, through whom the defendants claimed, had been from 1843 in adverse possession for more than twelve years. The suit was therefore barred under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). This judgment was affirmed by their Lordships. MAHABIR PERSHAD v. ADHIKARI KOER. I. L. R. 23 Cal. 942

The tenant denied the liability to pay enhanced rent, and, stating that he held the land on payment of Government assessment only, refused to quit. Inasmuch as the defendants had set up their adverse possession at a time when, according to plaintiffs' case, their yearly tenancy had been determined, and such adverse possession had continued down to the date of the present suit, namely, for a period of more than twelve years the defendants had acquired, by prescription, a right to hold possession as permanent tenants at that rent. *Seshamma Shettai v. The defendant pleaded adverse possession, and contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff proved that up to 1879 the defendant, admitted the plaintiff's ownership of the land. The two lower Courts found that the land was the plaintiff's, but held that the suit was barred:—Held (reversing the decree), that, the defendant having admitted the plaintiff's ownership up to 1879, it lay upon him to show when the alleged adverse possession under Art. 144 commenced, or under Art. 139, when the tenancy terminated. As the land was shown to belong to the plaintiff, and defendant had not proved any agreement under which he could remain in possession after plaintiff had signified his intention to resume, he must surrender possession. amicable partition of the family property was proposed, and it was agreed that a certain portion should be allotted to the plaintiff in satisfaction of the debt due to him by H C, but this arrangement was never carried out. In a suit brought in 1876 against the representative of H C for foreclosure of the mortgage, the plaintiff, who had admittedly been since 1842 in possession of the family property, alleged that no payment had ever been made in respect of the mortgage, nor any demand for payment, until 1878. 52. Application to revise a case and restore it to the board. After a decree had been made in a suit, the case was in 1875 struck out of the board for want of prosecution. No steps were taken to have it restored. In 1879 both the plaintiff and defendant died. In the same year the heirs of the plaintiff instituted a suit against the administrator of the defendant for the purpose of having the decree in the original suit carried out. That suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the Appellate Court, holding that the original suit was subsisting and might be reconstituted, directed that the plaintiffs should be allowed to amend their plaint by putting it into the form of a petition under s. 372 of the Code. On a petition by the plaintiffs praying that the original suit might be revived and restored to the board—Held, that the application was not barred under Art 178 of Sch II to the Limitation Act of 1877. Even if Art. 178 was applicable, the application would not be barred, limitation running from the time when the suit was allowed to be reconstituted. The Legislature did not intend to include in the Limitation Act every application to a Court with reference to its own list of causes, such as applications to transfer a case from one board to another, to transfer a case to the bottom of the board, change of attorneys, and so forth. GOVIND CHUNDER GHOSWAMI v. removed (Art 178 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877). Where a decree-holder, whose right of execution has been thus temporarily suspended, dies, his representative has the same rights as he had himself to apply for and obtain a revival of the proceedings. It was contended in the above case that G had no right to apply for a revival of proceedings, unless his name was substituted on the record as J's representative, that as his right to apply for such substitution accrued immediately upon J's death, which had happened more than three years previously, so much of his application of 3rd February 1880 as related to the substitution of names was barred by Art. 178 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877; and that consequently the other portion of his application which related to execution was necessarily inadmissible inasmuch as it depended upon the substitution of G's name, which it was too late to effect. Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, G's right to apply for the entry of his name in the place of that of J could not be regarded as having accrued immediately upon J's death. At that time J's application for execution, being suspended by the injunction, was to all intents and purposes non-existent. It could not be revived until the injunction was removed. During the

Art. 179 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applies only where there is a decree or order which can at its date be executed. In the case of a decree for pre-emption there is no decree capable of execution until the decree-holder pays into Court the pre-emptive price. The first application, therefore, for execution of such a decree will be governed, not by Art. 179, but by Art. 178, and limitation commences to run against the decree-holder from the time when the pre-emptive price is paid. *Muhammad Suleman Khan v. Art. 179 is not exhaustive of applications for execution of decrees. There are cases to which Art. 178 may apply. A decree which directs the sale of mortgaged property in default of payment of the mortgage money declared due on or before the date fixed in the decree is not, within the meaning of paragraph 6, column 3, of Art. 179, a decree directing the payment of the amount to be made at a certain date. applied for a postponement of the sale until harvest time, when he said he would pay the amount of decree. The sale was accordingly, with the plaintiffs' consent, postponed to the 31st May 1879. On the 13th June 1879 the plaintiffs informed the Court that negotiations were proceeding between themselves and the defendants for the settlement of the decree, and prayed that their application of the 16th July 1877 might be struck off; adding that, if the negotiations failed, they would present a fresh application. The negotiations for settlement proved abortive, and the case being one to which the Dek-application was not barred. As it was understood between the parties, when the application of the 16th July 1877 was struck off on the 13th June 1879, that, if negotiations failed, a fresh application should be presented, the application of the 13th December 1881 was to be regarded as an application for the revival of the old execution-proceedings. But, in any case, the application, by the defendant, of the 18th November 1877, for a postponement of the sale of his property when he promised to pay the amount of the decree

An order, purporting to be made under s. 272 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was made on 19th November 1895 requesting the Department to pay the money to the Court. On 20th December 1895, the Director of Public Works paid the money to the Court. The decree-holder petitioned the Court, under s. 264 and 272 of the Code, that the bail balance might be sent for and paid to him. Held, that the application was not barred, and that Art. 179 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act was inapplicable to the case. VENKATA RAMANAYAGAR v. PRABHAKAR (1900) 1 I. L. R. 24 Mad. 189

In an application made on 9th February 1892 for execution of the decree, the decree-holder stated that only the first instalment had been paid, and asked for execution for the amount remaining due under the decree, and the judgment-debtors denied having paid any of the instalments.—Held, that the clause in the decree to the effect that on non-payment of an instalment by the specified date it should be in the power of the decree-holder to realize the full amount, was not intended to give him the option of waiving the default if he pleased, but that it implied nothing more than the usual condition that on non-payment of an instalment the whole decretal amount would become exigible, if therefore the first instalment had not been paid, the application for execution not having been made within three years from the date when the whole amount became due, was barred by Art 170 of S. 3. Application after death of some of decree-holders—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 207. A joint decree for damages was obtained by several plaintiffs in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Patna in 1834, and was kept alive by endeavours to execute it till 1861. On Ameen was appointed on the 10th of 1861 and he reversed that order, and required from the present decree-holders a certificate of heirship, which they obtained on the 16th September 1863. On the 20th of the same month an order for execution was made by the Principal Sudder Ameen, but it was reversed by the Judge on appeal, on the ground that the order of the 28th May 1861 was not a proceeding within the meaning of s. 207 of Act XIV of 1859; and therefore the application for execution was too late.—Held, that execution might have been obtained under s. 207 of Act VIII of 1859 by the survivors of the original decree-holders for the benefit of all the parties interested in it. The order of the lower Appellate Court was reversed. TERJI SINGH v. RAJABHATYAN SINGH . . . 1 B. L. R. A. C. 63

parties had been remitted to the same position as they would have been in if no default had then occurred, and that on the subsequent default in 1897 the plaintiff's right to execution arose, and that consequently his application in 1899 was in time. Per JENKINS, C.J.—The true view appears to me to be that, though there may be a failure to pay punctually under an instalment decree, still the subsequent conduct of the parties may preclude acts intentionally caused the other to believe that the payment was a regular satisfaction of the obligation, and the parties have acted on that belief neither can afterwards deny the regularity. It is a fundamental proposition of law that payment and acceptance of overdue instalments cannot by themselves prove a waiver. The point is one to be determined on the circumstances of each case. Dulook v. Chugon, 1. L. R. 2 Bom. 356, and Balaji v. Sakharani, 1. L. R. 17 Bom. 555, commented on. *KASHIRAM v. MADRAS BOAT RULES—

1. Act IV of 1842—Act IX of 1846—Jurisdiction of Magistrates—Liability of owner under rule 7—Burden of proof. Under Act IX of 1846, the Madras Government is authorized to make in respect of ports in the presidency such regulations for the management of boats and such other matters as are provided for by Act IV of 1842 in respect of the Madras roads, being similar in principle to the provisions of the said Act, but varying in detail as local circumstances may require. Act IV of 1842, s. 24, empowers a justice of the Peace of the town of Madras to hear and determine all pecuniary forfeiture and penalties had or incurred under or against that Act. Held that it was competent to the Government of Madras to provide that cases cognizable under the rules passed in accordance with Act IX of 1846 should be heard and determined by Magistrates not being Justices of the Peace. Under rule 7 of the amended rule plying without its proper crew, the absence of proof by the prosecutor that the owner was aware of the fact was no bar to his conviction. In re ROUTHAKONNI. I. L. R. 8 Mad. 431

The omission by the Collector to pass a decision in accordance with an arbitrator's award and to furnish a copy to the parties as required by s. 21 of the Boundary Act is fatal to the award. The power given by s. 21 being a judicial power, a Collector must exercise his independent judgment, and should not refer the award for acceptance to the Board of Revenue and Government, nor should he adjudicate when, as agent to the Court of Wards, he represents one of the rival claimants. *SESHANA v. 1. Appeal—Limitation—Special extension of time for appeal. Under s. 25 of the Boundary Act (Madras Act XXVIII of 1860), the decision against which an appeal is allowed in the form of a regular suit is the original decision to the settlement officer, and not that of his superior passed on revision; and unless time is extended by the Governor in Council, the appeal must be brought within two calendar months from the date of the original decision. The provisions of the exception to s. 6 of the Limitation Act, 1871, do not apply. THIR SING v. VENKATARAMIA. I. L. R. 8 Mad. 92

As the settlement officer is required to take evidence before coming to a decision under s. 25, a decision based upon the report of a subordinate vitiates the whole proceedings and is not binding on the parties. *ANNAMALAI CHETTI v. Disposition of an usufructuary mortgagee under s. 43 of the Act does not convert the usufructuary into a simple mortgagee. Per MILLER, J.—The position of the Court of Wards on the dispossession of the usufructuary mortgagee, is analogous to that of a receiver for the collection of rents and profits, in respect of such mortgaged properties. The real payee of the promissory note is the landlord by his agent, the manager. Before dispossession the mortgagee was the landlord for the purpose of collecting rents and profits, and subsequent to dispossession, the Court of Wards to such extent was the landlord. When the Court's superintendence terminated, its receivership came to an end and the mortgagee as the landlord was the real payee entitled to sue and recover on the promissory notes. *SOWCAR LORD GOVINDA DASS v. 2. By-law No. 48—District Municipalities Amendment Act (Madras Act III of 1897)—Covering a drain without Municipal permission. A bye-law of a Municipality had been framed under the powers conferred by an Act of 1884 as amended by an Act of 1897, and was to the following effect: "No public drain shall be covered without the permission of the Municipal Council." It had come into force in 1890. Prior to its coming into operation, an earlier bye-law had subsisted, in substantially the same terms. An occupier of premises, who had covered a drain during the subsistence of the earlier bye-law, was charged with having committed an offence under the later bye-law and contended by way of defence that he could not be convicted, inasmuch as the act complained of had been committed before the passing of the Act under which the complaint was laid. He was convicted by a Bench of Magistrates:—Held, that the conviction was right. Per ARNOLD WURTE, C. J.—The bye-law applies to all drains which existed in a covered state at the time when it came into operation. The word "shall" is used throughout the bye-laws in the imperative, and not with reference to time, and this is the sense in which it is used in the bye-law in question. Per BENSON, J.—A bye-law similar in terms to that under which the accused had been convicted having been in existence under the then Municipal Act at the time when the accused first covered the drain in question, the liability then incurred by him continued, under the General Clauses Act (Madras) unaffected by the passing of the present Municipal Act. The contention that the accused could not be convicted because the act complained of was committed before the present Municipal Act was passed, therefore failed. *PERMANAN PILLAI v. A conviction is no bar when such Councillor is subsequently re-elected, to the invalidation of the election on the ground of such conviction. Rules 34, 35 and 36 are not ultra vires. The rules were validly made in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 250 (1); and even if not so, the power to prescribe conditions conferred by s. 10, empowers the Governor in Council to make such rules. Rules 35 and 36 prescribe the procedure to be followed when a petition contesting the election is presented. The word "then" in rule 35 means "after such petition is presented to the Collector" and not "after the Governor in Council has taken action under rule 34". The Governor in Council taking action under rule 34 is not confined to putting the Collector in motion under rule 35, but can pass orders himself. Such power is not taken away by the powers conferred on the Collector under rules 35 and 36, but only by an order of the Collector duly passed under those rules on a petition presented to him. The Governor in Council may take action under rule 34, whether a petition has been presented or not. The fact that the

do not warrant the validity of an election being questioned on the ground that the person elected was likely to bring the municipal administration into contempt without such enquiry as is provided by the rules, and the pronouncement of such disqualification by the Governor in Council under rule 34 without such enquiry cannot be supported. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. lector for separate registration and assessment of the said village, but on notices being sent to the zamindar and the lessees, they filed objections which, after due enquiry, were overruled by the Collector, who ordered separate registration and fixed the assessment. On appeal, the Board of Revenue supported the action of the Collector. Whereupon the lessees appealed to the Government of Madras on the 21st September 1891, and the Government of order of the Madras Government, dated the 14th November 1891, directing the Collector to cancel the separate registration and assessment of the said

Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as the order had been already carried out. Held, also, that, if the general words of the prayer "for such other relief as the circumstances of the case may require" were to be taken as including a prayer for consequential relief, then the suit was bad for misjoinder, inasmuch as the zamindar and the lessees who were interested parties were not joined. Held, also, that not only the person applying under Act I of 1876, s. 2, for separate assessment and registration must be entitled thereto, but also that the parties to the alienation must concur in the application. *FISCHER v. directed the cancellation of the Collector's order, after sanction by the Board for the separate registration of the village:—Held, that this declaration should be decreed. The objection that the suit was contrary to the law enacted in s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, was not sustainable. No further relief could have been required by the plaintiff. The effect of the declaration itself for which he had sued would be sufficient to maintain the Collector's original order, which was valid in law, while the order of the Government directing its cancellation was not legal and was void. Nor was the suit defective for want of parties. Another suit heard on appeal with the above, having been brought by the lessees of the entire zamindari, against the same grantee, raised the question, what was the oblizamindari:—Held, that he was only liable, after the registration and assessment, for burdens lawfully incident to the separate holding, and that they were to be discharged by direct payment by him to the Collector. FISCHER v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. ORR v. FISCHER. I. L. R. 22 Mad. 270

s. 176, and Sch. V of the Act—Held, that in the absence of any statutory definition of the word applicable in construing the Act, the word must be taken to be used in its ordinary and popular meaning, and so construed, it means the amount of money actually used in the business, i. e., the paid-up capital. The fact that the word, in the Indian Companies Act, is used in the sense of nominal capital is no argument for so construing it in the Municipal Act, as the two Acts are not in pari materia. The underlying principle of Schedule V of the Act is that taxation should be roughly proportionate to the professional incomes of individuals. The word "capital" is used in the same sense in Sch. V of Act III of 1904 and in Sch. A of Act I of 1884. In construing fiscal Acts, the construction most beneficial to the subject ought to be adopted. possession," in the recital of Regulation XXV of 1802, mean the possession of a person who is a proprietor according to the technical meaning of the term. According to the true construction of Madras Regulations XXV and XXXI of 1802, the Legislature recognizes the right of private property, and does not assert a right on the part of Government to deprive or dispossess zamindars in their life time, or their heirs after their deaths, independently of any considerations connected with the realization of the public revenue. It provides for the protection of the revenue from invalid lakhiraj grants, and for the mode of trying the validity of the titles of persons claiming so hold their ss. 4, 12—Zamindar's sanad, assets mentioned in—Quit-rent on an aghaharam village—Inam title-deed, rate mentioned in—Joint liability of aghaharamdars—Rent, rate of. The plaintiff was a zamindar holding his estate under a sanad dated 1802. This sanad followed almost verbatim the language of Regulation XXV of 1802, s. 4, and where it referred to "lands paying a small quit-rent," added "which quit-rent unchangeable by you is included in the assets of your zamindar." The suit was brought to recover arrears of jodi or quit-rent accrued due on an aghaharam village in the zamindari. The defendants, who were the aghaharamdars, had divided the village and held it in separate shares. They pleaded that they were not liable to pay jodi in excess of the rate fixed by the Inam Commissioner and specified in the inam title-deed granted by him for the village in 1802. Held, (i) that the decision of the Inam Commissioner did not affect the zamindar's claim, and that the question to be determined was what was the jodi payable in respect of the village at the time of the permanent settlement on which the peishush of the zamindar was fixed; (ii) that the defendants rate, or had paid it under coercion, the Court presumed that that was the rate at the time of the Permanent Settlement. SORNANATHI APPA RAO v. GOPALESWATHAN. I. L. R. 16 Mad. 34

Confinement of Native Christian in stocks—Legality of order. By s. 10 of Mad. Reg. XI of 1816, heads of villages are given summary powers of punishment in cases of a trivial nature, such as using abusive language, and if the offenders "shall be of any of the lower castes of the people, on whom it may not be improper to inflict so degrading a punishment," they may be put in the stocks. A person who was a Mala, or Hinda pariah, by birth, and who had become a convert to Christianity, was convicted of having used abusive language, and sentenced to two hours' confinement in the stocks under the said Regulation. His profession was that of a weaver, but he, in fact, worked as a coolie. On the question of the legality of the sentence being referred to the High Court:—Held, that, to render a person liable to confinement in the stocks under the Regulation, there must be a concurrence of two circumstances, viz, (i) he must be a person belonging to one of the lower castes of the people, and (ii) he must be a person on whom, from his social standing or otherwise, it may not be improper to inflict so degrading a punishment. The test is not what is the offender's creed, but what is his caste. Semle. That a person who has changed his creed but continues to belong to his caste may be within the purview of the Regulation if the caste is of the nature therein referred to; but if he abandons his caste he cannot longer be said to "belong to one of the lower castes of the people" and punishment by confinement in the stocks would no longer be legal. The Queen v Nobi, I. The sanction of the Collector required by the proviso to cl. 4, s. 11 of the Rent Recovery Act, as a condition precedent to the enhancement of rent when the landlord has improved the land or has had to pay additional assessment to Government, is not requisite, when, improvements having been made by the tenant, the landlord seeks to enhance the rent. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—The proviso to cl. 4 of s. 11 of the Rent Recovery Act implies that, when the tenant has improved the land at his own expense, the landlord is not entitled on that ground to enhance the rent. See Cl. 1 of s. 11, which provides that all contracts for rent, express or implied, shall be enforced, cannot be so applied as to deprive a tenant of the benefit of improvements made at his own expense. Per HUTCHINS, J.—When improvements have been made by the tenant, the proper rate of rent has to be determined with reference to the several provisions of s. 11, quite irrespective of the improvements. It is unsafe to imply such a contract from a single lease for five years. The pergunnah was not surveyed, and a money assessment fixed prior to 1859. The District Judge expunged the conditions in the pottah above referred to, and held that the zamindar was entitled to collect by way of rent from the rayats respectively, the quota of the village rents which each rayat paid in 1861. He found, however, that there was no contract, express or implied, as to the rent to be paid; and that prior to 1851 the rayats held their lands under the zamindar on the sharing system, and that for the first year after the restoration of the pergunnah the arrangement enforced by Government had remained in force, but that from 1863 to 1870 the sharing system was in force, and varam was paid by the rayats, after which for five years individual money rents were collected, and then there were two leases with money rents each for a period

The granting of such sanction is a judicial and not a merely administrative act, and such sanction should not be granted without first giving notice to both the landlord and the tenant, and hearing and considering the contentions of both parties. In a suit by the landlord to enforce the exchange of a pottah and muchalka, the tenant objected to the rate of rent imposed on part of the land, which was dry land converted into wet:—Held, that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was an implied contract to pay rent at such rate was not open to any

The tenant was described in the cowlie as a sukavasi riyat, and the defendants also claimed to be sukavasi tenants. Held, that it was unnecessary to determine the cause of the variations in the amount of rent, and that an agreement that the rent should continue to be paid in money should be implied, and the landlord accordingly was not entitled to impose a pottah providing for payment of rent in kind. *Pozu v. enhancement was justified on the ground (among others) that the Government had added a corresponding increase to the water-rate and that the Deputy Collector had under s. 11, cl. 4, of the Rent Recovery Act sanctioned the enhanced rent. Such an order had, in fact, been passed, but it had been cancelled by the Collector, who remanded the matter to the Deputy Collector to make inquiry and to pass a fresh order, without retrospective effect. The Deputy Collector passed a fresh order on 29th August, 1898—nearly two months after the close of the Pashi 1307, for which the pattas had been tendered. That order sanctioned an enhancement of 2 annas 3 pies per acre. On suits being filed to enforce acceptance of pattas containing enhanced rent at the rate of one rupee per acre:—Held, that the Collector had power to cancel the order sanctioning the enhancement at the rate of one rupee per acre, which, in consequence, could not be enforced, and that an enhancement of even 2 annas 3 pies could not be claimed, as the pattas were bound to be and had been tendered prior to 30th June, 1898, in respect of Pashi 1307, which ended on that date, and the tenants were not bound to accept pattas in which an enhanced rate not sanctioned by the Deputy Collector till 29th August was charged. *ZANINDARNIOF NIDAYOLE v. Summary suit for damages for wrongful distraint—No proper pottah tendered—Jurisdiction of Summary Court. A tenant sued his landlords summarily under s. 49 of the (Madras) Rent Recovery Act for cancellation of a distraint and for restoration of the property distrained or its value. It appeared that there were three landlords who owned the village and that the pottah has been tendered by only two of them for their shares, and was consequently not a proper one:—Held, that the defendants were landlords who, had they tendered a proper pottah, would have been entitled to distraint under the Act. The fact that the pottah which had been tendered was not a proper one did not cause the proceedings taken by them under the provisions of the Act to be a proceeding not taken under colour of the Act. Held, also, that the suit was one for damages. *VELAVALLE RAMAKRISHNAYYA v. The period of six months allowed for suits to set aside sales under s. 59 of the Madras Act II of 1864 must be calculated from the date when the sale is confirmed and not from the date when the Collector on revision under Regulation VII of 1828 passes his final order. The plaintiff relied, firstly, on the appointment made by his father in 1865, and, secondly, on the fact of his being the eldest son of the last incumbent, to whom, he maintained, both by law and custom belonged the succession to the offices in question so long, at least, as such eldest son was in other respects a fit and proper person to succeed, which in his own case was not contested. The defendant denied that either by law or custom was the eldest son, as such, entitled to succeed, and relied on the fact of his appointment by his father.—Held, that the plaintiff had made out no case of a right to succeed his father in the offices in question. Reasonably clear intention—A mental act although afterwards sufficiently expressed in conduct will not, unless clothed in appropriate words, create a waqf. Per CURIAM: We do not think that a mere statement in a will of some gift in the past can be referred back to the date still undetermined, when that gift is afterwards alleged to have been made, or that such a narrative statement can in any view be an adequate substitute for the oral declaration of dedication to God, which the Mahomedan law appears to us imperatively to require synchronously with the act of dedication itself. There is a plain distinction between giving charity and declaring that one has given in charity. And for the purpose of fixing the origin of the waqf, if there was a waqf at all, the mere statement in a will that at some past date the testator had set apart such and such funds for charitable objects is of comparatively slight value. Where there has been no actual delivery, a reasonably clear declaration is necessary to create a waqf. BAKUBI v. NARSINGRAO (1906) I. L. R. 31 Bom. 250

The plaintiff, a judgment-creditor of M, then sued the minor for a declaration that M's share in the property of his brother, which he had relinquished, was liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree. The lower Court decreed the plaintiff's claim on the grounds that the relinquishment was not valid and binding upon the donor under the Mahomedan Law, since being a gift it had not been accompanied and perfected by possession and that it was void against M's creditors under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), because it had been made with intent to defeat, delay or defraud them. Held, that the relinquishment by M of his share in the property of his brother was not a gratuitous transaction, but was supported

Upon the death of G, a Mahomedan, his estate was divisible into eight shares, two of which devolved upon his son, A, one upon each of his five daughters, and one upon his widow, B. The name of B only was recorded in the revenue registers in respect of the zamindari property left by G. In 1876 A and B gave to X a deed of simple mortgage of 2½ biswas out of a 5 biswas share of a village included in the said property. In 1878 A and B gave to S a deed of simple mortgage of the 5 biswas, which were described in the deed as the widow's "own" property. In 1882 X obtained a decree upon his mortgage for the sale of the mortgaged property, and it was put up for sale and purchased by X himself in January 1884. In February and November 1884 the daughters of G obtained ex parte decrees against A and B in suits brought by them to recover their shares by inheritance in the 5 biswas. In 1885 S brought a suit upon his mortgage of 1878, claiming the amount due thereon and the sale of the whole 5 biswas. To this suit he made defendants A and B, G's daughters, and X, alleging that the decrees of February and November 1884 were fraudulently and collusively obtained, and as to the auction sale of January 1884, that the 2½ biswas were sold subject to his mortgage, he not having been made a party to the suit brought by X upon the deed of 1876, and therefore not being bound by any of the proceedings taken therein or consequent thereon. died on 7th February 1891, a share of property which had devolved upon him on the death of his sister, the senior widow, and other property which he had inherited from his father, the plaintiff claimed the latter as sole heir on the ground that the widow and daughters were excluded by custom from inheriting, and that the defendant's father had predeceased the brother whose estate she was claiming. Held, in respect of the former property, that the cause of action arose at the earliest from the death of junior widow, and the suit having been brought within 12 years from that date was not barred by limitation. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that the daughters but not the widow were excluded by custom, and calculated the share of the plaintiff on the principle that as the custom by which daughters were excluded was founded on the notion that property should not be allowed to pass into another family, the exclusion should operate for the benefit of the persons who became heirs in default of daughters who should therefore be treated as non-existent so as to let in the defendants, the nephews, and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee affirmed that view. In 1895 the plaintiff had brought a suit for maintenance against her brothers who were in possession of their father's property, and in that suit she made a compromise with them on 10th September 1896 on the terms that they would pay her an allowance of Rs 60 per annum for life, and objection was ——— Mortgage by widow—Power to mortgage shares of minors—Mahomedan law of sale. In 1884 I, a Mahomedan, died intestate, leaving a widow, two sons, and two daughters. At the time of his death he was the owner of a certain house in Bombay. After his death his widow and his eldest son E (without the consent of the other children, who were minors) mortgaged the said house to the defendant. In 1894 a younger son and one of the daughters of I filed this suit, praying that their shares in the house might be ascertained and declared; that the house should be sold, and their shares in the proceeds handed over to them. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's mother and adult brother E had mortgaged the house to him in 1891 as a security for a loan of Rs. 500 which they wanted to pay off debts incurred in rebuilding the house and to defray the marriage expenses of E. He contended that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiffs, having been made for the benefit of the family, and that, if not, the plaintiffs were bound to pay him the money due to him before claiming any share in the house. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to their shares in the said house free and discharged of the mortgage executed to the defendant. The Mahomedan law makes no provision with regard to mortgages, as such transactions are, strictly speaking, unlawful as they involve the payment of interest. As, how-

MAHOMEDAN LAW—PARTITION.

Partition suit, decree in—Infants, non-parties, how far bound. Under the Mahomedan law, the minor heirs of a mother, not parties to a partition suit, for her share in her father's estate and continued after her death by her husband as her executor, and whose interests were not legally protected at the time of partition, are clearly entitled to have the matter gone into again. But the division, as then made, should not be disturbed more than is absolutely necessary properly to adjust the interest of the heirs. Even if the portion of a dowry that was prompt was not claimed by the wife in her life-time, the same on her death, together with the deferred portion thereof, becomes available to her estate, vests in her executors and passes on to her heirs. The executor of a Mahomedan takes the whole estate of the testator by virtue of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, for the entirety thereof.

13. Time taken to ascertain if information of sale is correct. According to the Mahomedan law, the mere fact of the pre-emptor taking a short time before performance of the talab-i-mawasabat for ascertaining whether the information conveyed to him was correct or not, does not invalidate his right. The Mahomedan law allows a short time for reflection before performance of the first demand. AMJAD HOSEIN v. KHARAO SEN SANU . . . 4 B. L. R. A. C. 203: 13 W. R. 299

A person seeking pre-emption declared his right thereto when he first heard of the sale, in the presence of witnesses; and as soon as was possible on the same day, in the presence of the same witnesses, demanded his right from the vendors and the purchasers—Held, that it was unnecessary that he should again state, when making his demand, or that his witnesses should testify to the fact that he had declared his right as soon as he heard of the sale. The principle of the law of pre-emption is that the pre-emptor should assert his right as soon as he has heard of the sale; that he should demand his right from the vendor or purchaser, or on the ground, in the presence of witnesses, and this assertion and demand may be simultaneous; but if they are not, the pre-emptor, when he makes the demand, is required to make a declaration before witnesses that he asserted his right when first he heard of the sale. *NUNDO PERSHAD THAKUR v. 1. ——— Taverai—Succession—Tarwad.
In Malabar the word "taverai" has several distinct meanings. In the families of the princes all times adopted the same customs, but there is the strongest presumption against the truth of this in the case of the private family. Families becoming very numerous have often split into various branches. In the language of the people, there is community of purity and impurity between them, but no community of property. In the only sense of the word with which Courts of Justice are concerned, people so related are not of the same tarwad. Where there are several houses bearing the same original tarwad name, but with an addition, and there is no evidence of the passing of a member of one house to another, there is the strongest ground for concluding that this separation has taken place. ERAMBAPALLI KOPPEN NAYAR v ERAMBAPALLI CHEEN NAYAR. 6 Mad. 411

2. ——— Joint property—Acquisitions not disposed of in lifetime—Family property—Presumption from position of karnavan. By the law of Malabar all acquisitions of any member of a family which he has not disposed of in his lifetime form part of the family property. The acquirer, however, may during his lifetime hold, alienate at once, and encumber, his self-acquisitions. A karnavan, in possession of the family funds, is presumed to have made all acquisitions with them and for the benefit of the corporate body. But such presumption is not irrebuttable, and his alienation or charge of such acquisitions made during his lifetime may be valid. KALLATI KUNJU MENON v PALAT ERACHA MENON. 2 Mad. 162

34. ———— Nambudri—Sale in execution of decree. A junior member of a Nambudri illom, of which he was held out as the manager and de facto karnavan, contracted a debt for the purposes of the illom. The creditor sued him on the debt, but did not implead him as karnavan, and, having obtained a personal decree, attached and brought to sale in execution property belonging to the illom. A son of the judgment-debtor now sued to set aside the sale. Held, that the sale should be set aside. GOVINDA v. KRISHNAN . . . I. L. R. 15 Mad. 333 to the office of karnavan. The last part of the prayer was withdrawn. The mortgages were executed to secure a decree-debt, the decree having been passed ex parte against the late karnavan of the tarwad. No fraud was alleged, but the lower Courts found that the karnavan had been guilty of fraud in allowing the decree to be passed ex parte. The plaintiffs had not been parties to the decree, and the other junior member of the tarwad who had been joined were exempted from liability. Held, that the nature of the debt was not res judicata, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration that the mortgages in question were invalid as against them. MORDIN KUTTI v. 39. — Suit by junior members of a tarwad—Suit to restrain execution of a decree obtained in a suit against plaintiff's karnavan—Right of suit. In a suit brought in a subordinate Court by the junior members of a Malabar tarwad against their karnavan and others, the plaintiffs prayed for a declaration of the urama right of their tarwad in a certain devaswam, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants, other than the members of the plaintiff's tarwad, from executing a decree of a District Court, passed on appeal from a Munsif's Court, whereby certain lands of the devaswam were decreed to be surrendered to them in the character of uralers, it appeared (i) that plaintiff's karnavan was a party to the suit in which the abovementioned decree was passed; (ii) that the plaintiff's tarwad was otherwise entitled to the urama right by adverse possession, if not immemorial title. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit without proof of fraud and collusion on the part of their karnavan in the previous suit; and that they were entitled to the decree as prayed. APPU v. 43. ———— Decree against karnavan on tarwad debt before partition—Execution after partition—Joint decree executed against separate property In a suit for declaration that certain land was not liable to be attached in execution of a decree obtained in 1880, it appeared that the decree was passed against the judgment-debtor as karnavan of a Malabar tarwad, and that it was for a debt incurred for purposes binding on the tarwad. In 1882 a partition had been come to between the members of the tarwad under which the property in suit had been allotted to the plaintiff. Held, that the state of things when the debt was contracted must be looked to, and at that time the karnavan was competent to bind all the members of the tarwad. Any subsequent arrangement in the family could not affect their obligation to the creditor, who was not a party to it. The plaintiff's property therefore was liable notwithstanding the partition. On this property belonging to the defendant having been stolen, he informed the chief police constable entrusted with the inquiry that he suspected the stolen property to be concealed in plaintiff's house. Accordingly the plaintiff's house was searched, and on 5 or 6 days ago, and the plaintiff was placed in confinement for an hour or so. No property was, however, found. Thereupon the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover damages for loss of character suffered by him in consequence. Both the lower Courts decreed the plaintiff's claim, holding that it lay on the defendant to prove reasonable and probable cause for the suspicion communicated to the police and the search of the plaintiff's house. On second appeal the High Court reversed the decrees and dismissed the suit. End of January, 1884. that the rule as to the burden of proof in suits for malicious prosecution should be extended to a case like the present. The courts therefore lay on the plaintiff not only to show in the plaintiff, but also to prove against the defendant, malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause for the information given by him to the police. The plaintiff, however, had given no evidence of his own innocent nor that the suspicion of the defendant was groundless, nor that the defendant had any malice. Per RAYSON, J.—The present case was governed by the principles which governed suits for defamation, and under the circumstances the action of the defendant fell within the exception which protects information given to a person in authority in the discharge of a public or private duty, where no malice in fact is shown to exist. See Molodtsoff v. Suro Keltys, 11 W. R. 324. There is a distinction between the case of a false charge filed under s. 211 of the Penal Code and that of false information given to the police under s. 112. A person prosecuting another for an offence under the latter section need not prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause except so far as they are implied in the act of giving information known to the police with the knowledge or belief that such information would lead a police servant to use his power to the injury or annoyance of the complainant. In an inquiry under s. 211, on the other hand, the absence of just and lawful ground for making the charge is an important element. *Gravel Duff Singh v. Metropolitan Chandley, 11 E. L. R. 321; 19 W. The plaintiff and the Municipal Commissioner of Boston for the district alleged that the Commission had million only and which is reasonable and probable cause provided a witness to be heard against him on the 21st March 1902 and subsequently procured that witness to be exempted at a time when his time was spent and under circumstances when it could not have been exempted. From the evidence it appeared that on the 21st December 1891 a notice was served on the plaintiff under a seal of the City of Boston Municipal (Ill) of 1891 requiring him to go to certain distance which upon promises he tried to him. The witness not having been there a summons was issued against him on the 11th February 1902 requiring him to appear before the President of the Court to answer a charge of not having complied with the above order. The summons was returnable on the 21st February 1902 and on that day the plaintiff appeared but the hearing was postponed until the 21st March 1902. On the 21st February 1902 the plaintiff was in the defendant's apartment at the

for not complying with the requirements of the notice served on him. The Courts held that the non-appearance of the plaintiff on the 24th March was not caused by the receipt of this letter. On the 24th idem in consequence of the non appearance of the plaintiff in obedience to the summons, a warrant of arrest was issued against him. The date originally inserted in the warrant for the plaintiff's appearance before the Magistrate was the 7th April, but this date was subsequently altered to the 2nd June. There was no evidence as to how or by whom this alteration was made. The plaintiff, having heard on the 5th March of the issue of the warrant, appeared next day (the 26th) before the Magistrate and surrendered, showing to the Magistrate the defendant's letter of the 23rd March and explaining why he had not attended on the 24th. A note was made of his surrender, and he was told by the Magistrate to appear on the 7th April. The plaintiff, however, did not get the warrant cancelled. He stated that at the office of the Presidency Magistrate's Court he was informed that the warrant was with the

of the warrant of the 24th March. The evidence was that on that morning at 8 o'clock, a Municipal inspector, H, who was not called as a witness at the hearing, accompanied by a Police sepoy, went to the plaintiff's house and pointed out the plaintiff to the sepoy who arrested him and took him in custody to the police station and subsequently before the Magistrate. He was released on depositing Rs 25 as security for appearing when required. On the 16th June the plaintiff again appeared in the Police Court, when the summons was withdrawn. The plaintiff claimed Rs 10,000 as damages for malicious prosecution, wrongful arrest, and detention in custody and false imprisonment. The defendant denied that he had applied for or obtained the warrant for the plaintiff's arrest or that he or his servants had anything to do with the arrest or was responsible for it, save that a sub-inspector who knew nothing of the warrant had pointed out the plaintiff to a police officer at the latter's request. He further denied that the proceedings were malicious and without reasonable and probable cause. The lower Court (STARLING, J.) held that the de-question was a spent warrant, and could not be properly executed, as it was, on the 31st May. As the warrant was issued by the Magistrate of issued an order in favour of the plaintiff (defendant 3) in respect of the lands in dispute, which was also ratified by her adopted son (defendant 4). In 1871 the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the lands.

then dead, his widow (defendant 3) was in possession of the lands in dispute, which was also ratified by her adopted son (defendant 4). In 1871 the plaintiff sued to recover possession of the lands. Defendants 1 and 2 contended, inter alia, that the lands were their private property and had never been in the possession of the plaintiff's widow. The suit affirmative, being of opinion that the Mamlatdar was in possession at the time the Mamlatdar's order was issued to the plaintiff. The defendants appealed, and the Subordinate Judge confirmed the Mamlatdar's Court's decree. He treated the Mamlatdar's order as one made under the Mamlatdars' Act, and, as such, binding conclusively on the defendants, as it had not been set aside within three years from its date. On appeal to the High Court, it was held that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in treating the Mamlatdar's order as passed under the Mamlatdars' Act. The order

MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE BY COURT—contd.

1. Summary enforcement of contract made by the Court—Israh lease—Lessee
—Application by a person not a party to a suit. A Court has complete power to enforce summarily a contract made by it when managing or administering an estate, whatever that contract may be. Such power of enforcing subsisting contracts made by it is not affected by the fact that the Court has ceased to manage the estate before such contract is carried out by reason of the dismissal of the suit under an order in which the Court had derived its power of management. Case in which the Court passed summarily such an order on the application of a lessee, not a party to the suit in which the order completing the agreement for lease had been passed, and at the time when such suit was no longer in existence. SURENDRO KESRUB ROY v. The right to inspect the documents of a corporation, which at common law belongs to every member of such corporation, is not an absolute right, but is confined to cases where the member of the corporation has in view some definite right or object of his own and to those documents, which would tend to illustrate such right or object. Semble. The Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the Board of Examiners and cannot, where there is a discretion imposed on any body, issue a writ of mandamus to compel that body to exercise that discretion in any particular way, but can only compel the exercise of that discretion in a manner fair, candid and unprejudiced and not arbitrary, capricious or biased, much less warped by resentment or personal dislike. PER WOODROFFE, J. The Court cannot dispense with the production of the certificate mentioned in Rule No. 118 of the Original Side of the High Court. The Court will not interfere with the conscientious exercise by the examiners of the discretion which the Court has confided in them. In the matter of PRYIA CHANDRA DUTT (1908) I. L. consummation of the marriage. There was no physical defect in either plaintiff or defendant, nor any unwillingness in the plaintiff to consummate the marriage; but the defendant had always entertained such hatred and disgust for the plaintiff as to result, in the opinion of the medical experts, in an incurable impotency in the defendant as regards the plaintiff. The delegates unanimously found, on the evidence, that the consummation of this marriage had from its commencement been impossible; because the defendant was, from a physical cause, namely, impotency as regards the plaintiff, unable to effect consummation. They also found that there was no collusion or connivance between the parties. Held, on this finding, that such impotency quoad the plaintiff must be regarded as one of the causes going to make consummation of a marriage impossible under s. 28 of Act XV of 1865, there being nothing in the Act to suggest a contrary opinion. Suit to recover fees for medical attendance—Fees partly secured by a promissory note—Separate suits upon the promissory note and for the unsecured balance—Latter suit barred. A, a doctor, agreed with B to accompany B to Hardwar as his medical attendant on a fee of Rs 100 a day. After seven days B gave A a promissory note for Rs 700 representing seven days' fees. B, who was a vakil, also promised to assist A professionally in certain litigation. B, however, died before he could fulfil his agreement to render professional under the alleged agreement and for fees for medical attendance at Benares. Held, that the second suit was barred by the provisions of s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure so far as the fees for attendance at Hardwar were concerned, though not in respect of the other fees claimed. PRONATH MCKERRI v. MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

Homicide or death from epilepsy—Scratches on the neck. Where amongst other marks noticed on the body of the deceased, there appeared certain scratches on the front part of the neck running downwards:—Held, upon a consideration of medical authorities, that though in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon it was probable that the deceased met with his death from throttling, the alternative theory was equally probable that the scratches were self-inflicted whilst the deceased was labouring under an epileptic or other fit and of which he died. Having regard to this as also to the nature of the evidence adduced in support of the prosecution, the accused who were charged with murder were acquitted.

— Remuneration for professional attendance. The amount of remuneration for the professional attendance of a medical officer on the family of a public servant in the absence of an express agreement should be determined with reference to the circumstances in each case, and the principle adopted by the Judge in estimating the amount, that reference must be had not only to present means, but to prospects, without considering other matters, was not correct. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that one-fifth of the monthly income of the defendant was the fair amount to which the plaintiff was entitled for his professional attendance for the year. On the 17th September 1892, the defendant purchased the mukararidar's interest in the share subject to the mortgage. On the 7th October 1898, R obtained a decree in a suit brought on his mortgage against F, W and the defendant, and finally became the purchaser of the proprietary and the mukarari interest of the share at an auction sale. The defendant, however, failed to exercise his right of redemption. In consequence of default made in payment of the revenue, R's interest in the property was sold on the 25th April 1899 under the Revenue Sale Law, and was purchased by D. A further default having been made by D, the latter's interest in the property was sold and the plaintiff purchased the same. The plaintiff, thereupon, brought a suit for his possession and mesne

He was unable to obtain the rent dakhilas of tenants. He inquired as to the prevailing rates of rent for the land which he measured, and included in his estimate of the mesne profits rents which with ordinary diligence might have been obtained. Upon objections taken the questions arose (i) whether the assessment should have proceeded only upon the rent actually realized, or the Ameen was right in taking the rent last mentioned into the account; (ii) whether the evidence of the rent dakhilas was essential; (iii) whether interest, not mentioned in the decree, should have been allowed; (iv) whether or not evidence on the application of the objector should have been taken by the Court after return of the evidence taken in the locality by the Ameen together with his report. Held, as to (i), that in-

of the Court upon consideration of the facts.

The decree which he obtained was a decree for cancellation of the lease and ejectment of the defendant, and ordered that mesne profits should be ascertained in the execution department, but was silent as to interest. Held, that interest on the mesne profits could not be that interest on the decree. HURRO DURG v. Principles upon which mesne profits of khamar land should be assessed discussed. Interest as forming a part of the mesne profits or damages cannot be allowed for any period subsequent to that limited by s 21 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). That decision, however, is also an authority for the proposition that the circumstances of a particular case may be such that having regard to s. 41 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the Court may, on adjudging the cancellation of an instrument, require the party to whom such relief is granted, to make any compensation to the other, which justice may require. *DATTA RAM v. ity for issue of certificate of administration is only to complete appointment of guardian of person. The Bombay Minors Act XX of 1884, s. 2, is a special provision for the appointment of a guardian of the property of a minor, but only for the case of a certificate of administration, and until such certificate is issued, there is no such appointment of a guardian of the property as will extend the age of the minority from sixteen to twenty-one. It is different as regards the appointment of a guardian of the person. The Act provides, in fact, for such an appointment being made, and a certificate of appointment is contemplated by the Act on the issuing of which it is plain that the appointment of a guardian of the person is made on the order of the Court being made in favour of him. The plaintiff's mother G. died in 1901, leaving several properties which she had inherited from her husband. The plaintiff, who was born in 1884, was then a minor of the age of sixteen years. In 1907 the plaintiff's maternal grandfather obtained a certificate of administration. On the 24th, as well as the Court was made on the 24th March 1912, and under the Name of the Court administrator of the property and the plaintiff's mother-in-law the guardian of the person of the plaintiff, but no two certificates of administration was granted. In 1909 the plaintiff brought the present suit asking the defendants to recover from them the property left to her mother. The defendants contended, and said that the plaintiff had attained her majority in 1894, when she attained at the age of sixteen, and that the suit was therefore barred by limitation. The plaintiff on the other hand contended that the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) was applicable, and that under its provisions, she did not attain majority until she was twenty-one, i.e. until the year 1905, and that the present suit was therefore in time. Held that the suit was not barred by limitation. The Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) was applicable (except as far as its operation was restricted by s. 2, inasmuch as there was a guardian of the person of the plaintiff in existence before she attained at the age of sixteen and she when she was eighteen, and therefore the period of minority or her was extended to twenty-one years of age. *Feroze v. Practice—Procedure—Cause of action—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 26, 28, 578—Misjoinder of causes of action—Assault by two persons on the same occasion on two other persons—Joint plaintiffs—Joint defendants—Plaintiffs 1 and 2 (father and son) were assaulted by defendants 1 and 2 at an interview in the house of the defendants. Defendant 1 struck the first plaintiff, and the second defendant struck the second plaintiff. The plaintiffs thereupon jointly filed this suit against both the defendants to recover damages for assault. The defendants objected that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. The lower Court disallowed the objection, and awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal by the defendants: Held, that the plaintiffs could not join in one suit for damages. They had not the same cause of ac-

the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). That section only applies to mistakes and irregularities subsequently committed in a suit which has been instituted in such a way as to give the Court jurisdiction to try it. The suit must first be instituted in the manner allowed by law. But the law, as it stands at present, does not authorize a suit, which is really two separate suits in which separate plaintiffs are concerned, to be instituted, nor does it give the Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit thus instituted. Held, also, that the defendants could be sued together under s. 28 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), as they were acting in concert. If two persons combine to attack a third person, the latter can join them as defendants in a suit for damages. VARAJLAL BHAIHANKAR v. RANDAT HANIKESHNA (1901). I. L. R. 26 Bom. 259

all pleaded that the suit as framed was bad by reason of misjoinder of parties and of causes of action. Held, disallowing the objection, that the suit was properly constituted. The most convenient way to try all the questions arising between the plaintiff and the defendants and the two sets of defendants inter se would be by one suit where all the three parties are before the Court as parties. The subject-matter in respect of which the plaintiff seeks relief is the rent of his godown. It is the same matter as regards both sets of defendants, and both sets of defendants are interested in the adjudication of the questions involved in the suit. The general principle governing the joinder of defendants would seem to be that there must be a cause of action in which all the defendants are more or less interested, although the relief against them may vary, but that separate causes of action against separate defendants quite unconnected and not involving any common question of law or fact cannot safely be joined in one action. The object of a s. 24 seems to be to avoid multiplicity of suits if it

amount of decree to prevent sale of mortgaged property—Voluntary payment The defendant sued one J H P in the Small Cause Court and obtained a decree, in execution of which he caused a steamer to be attached as being the property of J H P.
Thereupon the plaintiff, alleging themselves to be in possession of the steamer as mortgagees from J H P, in order to obtain its release, paid the amount of the decree against J H P into Court, and the steamer was given up. Subsequently an order was made by the Court, on the application of the plaintiffs, that the money should remain in Court pending the result of a suit to be brought by them for its recovery. They accordingly brought a suit against the defendant. The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that J H P had no attachable interest in the steamer, and that the plaintiffs had paid the amount of the decree on compulsion.
Held, that the plaintiffs could maintain the suit, although the defendant had not actually received the amount of the decree. MORAN v. DEWAN ALI

From the year 1858 the Courts of the Madras Presidency, and from the year 1864 the Courts of the Presidency of Bombay, have erroneously, and in contravention of the law of India as declared by the earlier decisions, adopted, with regard to this class of securities, doctrines which the English Courts of Equity have

On the same day, B executed to A a "counterpart document" by which he covenanted to reconvey the land and return the sale-deed if the sale amount be repaid to him in cash on 27th May 1875. 1. — Rights of mortgagees—Proviso in case of alienation of mortgaged property. Certain words in a mortgage deed stipulating that in the event of the property mortgaged being sold in execution of a decree, or otherwise alienated, the mortgagee should recover from any other property in the possession of the mortgagor, whose person should also be liable for debt, were construed as merely intended to give some supposed further security to the mortgagee, but not to take away his right to issue notice of foreclosure and obtain possession by a suit, even though the mortgaged property were sold away. ACHUVET MISSER v LALLA NUND RAN II W. R. 544

2. — Construction of instrument of mortgage. An instrument, mortgaging villages for a sum payable within a certain period by instalments, and making distinct provision that, upon default in payment of an instalment the mortgagee by his servants was to take possession, and after paying the revenue and the expenses of collection to credit the balance towards payment of the instalment, also contained the following: "Should, on the expiration of the term of this instrument, any money remain due belonging to me." Held, that such an instrument must be taken as a whole, and that the true construction to be put on it should be that which, being reasonable, would also give effect to all parts of it. Held, accordingly (on the contention that these words negatived the mortgagee's right to take possession upon default in payment of an instalment, leaving him only a right to proceed to sale), that, as this construction would not give due effect to the first part of the instrument, it must yield to a construction which not only would give such effect, but would also be the more reasonable one, viz., that the mortgagee should take possession upon such a default, and also might sell if the mortgagor objected to his applying the rents in reduction of the principal and interest due. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF RAJ BARKLI v RAMPAL SINGH I. On the 1st of November 1866, A covenanted to pay to B Rs. 351 with interest on the 16th of May 1870, and pledged certain property for repayment thereof. At the time of the mortgage this property was held by B, the mortgagee, under a lease which expired on the 10th of September 1870. and contained an agreement that out of the annual rent B should retain Rs. 6,500 on account of the debt and pay the remainder to A. 4. — Operative words in a mortgage-deed—General language. A mortgage-deed having specifically charged the property originally offered as security, extended the operation of the mortgage by general language to include all interests in the mahal, villages, and lands comprised in the sanad of a talukdari estate. It was now questioned whether one of the villages comprised in the sanad was part of the mortgaged property. The operative words, uncontrolled by anything in any recital, declared all the above subject to the mortgage. The deed was accordingly held to include the village in question, effect being given to the operative words in their ordinary meaning. LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA v. ABUL KAM KARIM I. L. Where a person mortgages his interest in a property, in a manner that interest being restricted or limited in some manner at the time of the mortgage, the mortgagee's lien is not limited to the interest so restricted and does not cease on the restriction being removed. The removal of encumbrances from the estate of a mortgagor effected by himself will, as a general rule, enure to the benefit of the mortgagee by increasing the value of the latter's security. SHYAMA CHARAN BUSTACHURIE v. and interest. The bond further provided that in case the rent derivable from the house should fall short of the amounts payable every month, the mortgagors would themselves pay them on the due dates, and that, in default, they would pay compound interest. In case the amounts payable should not be paid for five months, the mortgagees were to recover the debt from the mortgagors. On the same day the mortgagors by a separate agreement, rented the house from the mortgagees at a rental of Rs 30-10-0 per mensem, payable by the 25th of each month with compound interest on the amount of rent; in default, at the same rate as that payable under the mortgage bond in case of interest being in default. The lessees also agreed to vacate and deliver up the house to the lessors, or to those who obtained an order from the lessors, within thirty days of being required so to do. Default having been made, the mortgagees sued for the amount due, and, in default, for sale of the mortgaged property. Held, that the two instruments were executed as parts of one and the same transaction, and that the intention was that the rights and obligations of the parties were to be gathered from the provisions of both. Taking the two together, it was clear that the transaction was one entirely of mortgage with an express covenant to pay the principal and interest in instalments, and conferring a power on the mortgagee to take possession of the property mortgaged and apply the usufruct in the discharge of the interest and principal. Juggewundas v. Ramdas, 2 Moo I. A. 287, followed. Held, also, that the clause in the rental agreement as to delivery of the house when required left no room for doubt that the arrangement was one not binding the mortgagee to enter into possession and liquidate his debt by the usufruct; and the express covenant to pay precluded the mortgage from being taken as a purely usufructuary mortgage as defined by the Transfer of Property Act. Held, further, that the "Damdupat Rule" is inapplicable to cases of mortgage governed by the Transfer of Property Act. *Ram Kanye v. He covenanted with the mortgagee to pay him interest at the rate of annas 14 per cent., which, after deducting the Government revenue (which the mortgagor undertook to pay, and did pay regularly), left the sum of Rs. 141-12 payable annually by the mortgagor to the mortgagee for interest. It was further agreed that the mortgagee should pay himself the interest from the profits of the mortgaged property; and further that, if the amount of the profits in any year exceeded the sum payable as interest, the surplus should be applied by the mortgagee in reduction of the principal of the loan, and, on the other hand, that if the profits fell short of the sum payable for interest, the defendant-mortgagor would be liable for the balance, and would pay it along with the mortgage money. A further clause permitted the mortgagee, at any time he chose, to call in the mortgage money, and to recover it with interest and costs from the mortgagor and the mortgaged property. By an instrument of even date the mortgagor (who, under the abovementioned usufructuary mortgage, had put the mortgagee in possession) executed to the latter a kabuliat or rent

Kabuliat would lie only in a Revenue Court, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent for more than three years from the date of his suit. Altaj Ali Khan v. Lalla Prasad, I. L. R. 19 All. 496, distinguished. CHIMMAN LAL v. BSHADUR SINGH (1901) I. L. R. 33 All. 338

The sawai which equalled one-fourth of Rs. 5,000, was to take the place of interest. The sum of Rs. 5,000 was made up as follows: Rs. 4,812-8 were paid to the mortgagor in cash, Rs. 57-8 were retained by the mortgagee on account of the first instalment and Rs. 100 were retained on account of khuchadi (bonus). The mortgagee having brought a suit to recover the mortgage-debt, namely, Rs. 7,935, and a question having arisen whether the mortgage was so unconscionable as to be unenforceable in its integrity: Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the mortgage was enforceable in its integrity. Per Curiam.—The principles of justice, equity and good conscience do not of necessity disentitle a mortgagee from insisting on his security for a greater sum than what has been actually advanced: in each case the question must be asked whether there has or has not been a hard and unfair bargain on the borrower, but when that is not established against the mortgagee, then the right to redeem still remains, though it is redeeming not on payment of the sum advanced, but of the sum, which the parties agreed it was worth the mortgagor's while to pay in order to get a smaller advance, when he was in want of money. Full case must be determined by the court in its own mortgage—Step in aid of execution. A subsequent mortgage, who is a judgment-debtor in a suit for a prior mortgage, is competent to raise the question of limitation, when an application for execution is made, although he may be bound by the execution-proceedings. Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applies to a mortgage decree. When a mortgage decree is obtained against the original mortgagee and a subsequent mortgagee, but the decree does not in any way apportion the mortgage-debt, it cannot be said that the decree comes within the scope of the first part of the second paragraph of Art. 179 of Sch. II, merely because the subsequent mortgage would be affected by it only to the extent of properties covered by his mortgage. An application for postponement of a sale was made because the decree-holders by reason of a change of the manager were not acquainted with all the facts and because several of the properties had been advertised for sale at the instance of a prior mortgagee and also because no other parties were present. Held, that the application could not be considered as a step in aid of execution. As opposition by a decree-debtor to an application by the judgment-debtor to sell the property in a certain order is not a step in aid of execution. TRILOKIA NATH BOST v. On the question whether it was the intention of the parties to keep alive the mortgage, paid off, in favour of the defendants, the Appellate Court found that the defendants were not, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, aware of the plaintiff's mortgage and therefore could not have intended to keep alive those mortgages as against plaintiff's mortgage. Held (reversing the judgment of the Appellate Court and remanding the case), that the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court as to intention could not be legitimately drawn from the fact found by that Court; and the error was one which, under the rule laid down in Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton, L. R. 1911 2 All. 1011, the High Court could interfere with in a second appeal. The intention to keep alive an earlier mortgage may be found in the circumstances attending the transaction or may be presumed from a consideration of the fact whether it is or is not for the benefit that the charge should be kept alive. 221 I. Under Expl. II of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff was bound to set up his prior mortgage in that suit. mortgaged property," their Lordships agreed with the lower Courts that the mortgagee was entitled against the mortgagor to arrears of rent due from tenants even when such arrears were statute barred as against the tenants. The mortgagee had previously brought a suit against the mortgagor alleging that at the date of the suit there was due to him a sum of Rs 33,087-13-3½ and praying for a decree for possession of the property or in the alternative for recovery of that sum with further interest. A Commissioner appointed to make up the accounts reported that Rs 33,087-9-8½ were due to the mortgagee at the date of the suit. The Court in giving judgment held that there was no necessity for passing an order as to the amount due under the mortgage beyond saying that the account was correct and then proceeded to give the mortgagee a decree for possession. The amount alleged to be due by the mortgagee and found due by the Commissioner was arrived at by calculating compound interest on unpaid instalments of interest. It was contended by the mortgagee in a subsequent suit brought against him by the mortgagor for redemption of the mortgaged property that the decree in the previous suit must be accepted as settling the amount due to the mortgagee at the date of that suit. Held, by their Lordships, who adopted the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court, that nothing had liable for its proportionate share of the mortgage-debt. At the date of suit the mortgage-debt had increased to Rs. 400, and he claimed to recover Rs. 500 from the house. The purchaser of the house (defendant 1) pleaded that at the time of the sale the value of the field purchased by the mortgagee was more than sufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt, which was therefore wholly extinguished, and that the house was no longer liable. Held (FULTON, J., dissenting), that the house was liable in the hands of the first defendant to a proportionate share of the mortgage-debt, he having purchased it, subject thereto, and that the plaintiff (the mortgagee) was entitled to recover such share from him. Held, by FULTON J., that where a mortgagee, instead of enforcing his mortgage and bringing the property to sale free of incumbrances (where such course is open, as it was in the present case), brings to sale the equity of redemption in part of the mortgaged property, and buys it himself, an equity arises which entitles the mortgagor to require satisfaction first out of the property brought by the mortgagee. 108. ——— Extinction of charge—Intention of parties—Presumption. Whether a mortgage, paid off, has been kept alive or extinguished, depends upon the intention of the parties, the mere fact that it has been paid off not deciding the question whether or not it has been extinguished. Express declaration of intention will cause either the one result or the other and in the absence of such expression the intention may be inferred, either one way or the other. A lender of money upon a mortgage, which, however, having been made by a person not having authority to charge the greater part of the property included in it, was to that extent invalid, relied upon a charge effected in a prior paid-off mortgage to another mortgagee of the same property. The balance due for the prior mortgage debt had been paid out of the money advanced on the later, and the prior instrument had come into the possession of the present mortgagee. Held, that it must be presumed, in the absence of any expression of inten-without possession to the defendant; on the 16th of June 1873 a second mortgage, purporting to give possession, was executed to H; on the 12th of June 1873 a second mortgage, also purporting to give possession, was passed to the defendant; on the 15th of November 1877 H obtained a decree against the mortgagors upon his mortgage of 10th June 1873, and sold the lands which were purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought to obtain possession, but was obstructed by the defendant. He thereupon brought this suit. The defendant contended that he had not been a party to the suit by H, and was entitled to possession, and offered to pay to the plaintiff the amount of his purchase-money, or to vacate the lands on satisfaction of his own mortgage-hen. Held, that the question whether H's mortgage of the 15th July 1870 was to be regarded as merged in his second mortgage of 10th June 1873 so as to deprive him of priority of title over the defendant, depended on the intention of the parties to the said mortgage, and there was nothing in the second mortgage-deed to show an intention to forego the benefit of the security created by the prior mortgage-deed of 15th July 1870 which was neither given up to the mortgagor nor cancelled at the time, but remained with H until handed over to the plaintiff with the other title-deeds. Under these circumstances, the decree passed on the 15th November 1877 conferred an absolute title on the plaintiff, who purchased at the auction sale free from all incumbrances created by the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage of 15th July 1870. The defendant, however, not having been made a party to H's suit to enforce his security did not lose his right of redemption, which still remained to him. The plaintiff therefore purchased the property subject to the defendant's right of redemption. The High Court passed a decree fect to a succession of mortgages, and the owner of an ulterior interest pays off an earlier mortgage, it is a matter of course, according to the English practice, to have it assigned to a trustee for his benefit, as against intermediate mortgagees, to whom he is not personally liable. But in India a formal transfer for the purpose of a mortgage is never made, nor is an intention to keep it alive even formally expressed. It was ruled in the English Court of Chancery in Toulmin v Steere, 3 Mer 210, that the purchaser from an owner of an equity of redemption with actual or constructive notice of another intermediate incumbrance is precluded, in the absence of any contemporaneous expression of intention, from alleging that, as against such other incumbrance, the prior mortgage paid off out of the purchase-money is not extinguished. In October 1887 the plaintiff purchased certain lands at a sale held in execution of a decree passed on an unregistered mortgage effected in 1862. The defendant was in possession as mortgagee under a subsequent registered mortgage of 1867. He was not a party to the suit and decree of 1877. The plaintiff sued for possession. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff could not recover possession

April 1872 M sold the equity of redemption to the defendant's father, who became the purchaser without cancelling his first mortgage. The plaintiff subsequently sued M to enforce his san mortgage, and, obtaining a decree, placed an attachment on the house, which attachment, however, was removed on the application of the defendants' father. The plaintiff now sued to establish his right to levy the amount due on his san mortgage. He claimed priority to the defendant on the authority of Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer 216, where it was held that a purchaser of the equity of redemption could not set up a prior mortgage of his own against subsequent incumbrances of which he had notice. Held, that, the intention of the defendant's father when purchasing the equity of redemption having been to retain the benefit of all his rights, his son, the defendant, might properly require the redemption of his first mortgage as the condition of the plaintiff's enforcing the decree upon his mortgage against the property. A mortgagor purchasing the equity of redemption may indicate his intention to keep his charge upon the property alive otherwise than by express words. Per West, J.—The successive charges created by the owner of an estate may be regarded as fractions of the ownership, which embraces the aggregate of advantages that can be drawn from it. Each charge in its turn constitutes a deduction from the original aggregate, and the nominal ownership may itself then be reduced to a small fraction of what it once was. Still, be it small or great, it is a part of the ownership.

ment—Rejection of application under s 269 of Act VIII of 1859—Suit within one year. On the 17th October 1866, K (defendant No 1), one of the three sons of B, mortgaged certain immovable property to one N with possession. On the 19th December 1866, A (plaintiff No 1) obtained a money-decree against K and the estate of his deceased father. In execution of that decree, the property was sold by the Court and purchased by A himself, who obtained a certificate of sale, dated the 30th January 1868. He subsequently sold and conveyed the property to D and C (plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3). On applying to the Court for possession, the plaintiffs were resisted by N. The Court rejected the plaintiffs' application on the 11th July 1868. On the 31st May 1871, K and his two brothers mortgaged the property to M (defendant No 2), who took the mortgage with full notice of the Court-sale to the plaintiff A. K and his brothers paid off the mortgage of N out of the money borrowed by them from M (defendant No 2) on the mortgage of the property. N returned his mortgage deed to K and his brothers, who made it over to M. In 1878 the plaintiffs brought a suit against K and M for possession of the property. The Subordinate Judge held the plaintiffs entitled to recover it, on payment of the amount due to M on his mortgage, being of opinion that M was in the same position as N. On Defendants 17 and 18 are the assignees under another bond executed by K on the 22nd September 1882. The 1st bond, 1878, was sued on and the decree obtained on the 31st October 1881. The decree on the plaintiff's bond was obtained on the 31st July 1883, the decree on defendant No. 16's bond was obtained on the 19th February 1891; the sale certificate obtained by the defendants 25, 33 and another person, B, who were the purchasers at the sale in execution of the decree on account of the 4th bond, was dated the 13th February 1891. Plaintiffs purchased the mortgaged properties at the sale held in execution of their decree on the 2nd June 1884, and the plaintiffs took symbolical possession on the 16th October 1884; defendant No. 16 purchased the property in execution of her decree on the 29th February 1892. the 7th July 1870 the plaintiff, as purchaser at the abovementioned sale, was put into possession, but on the 24th August 1870 the defendant obtained a decree in ejectment against N (the mother of A) as her tenant. In execution of that decree, the defendant recovered possession of the land, dispossessing the plaintiff though he had not been a party to the ejectment suit. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover the land under s. 230 of Act VIII of 1859. His claim was rejected by the Subordinate Judge, but allowed by the joint Judge in appeal. On special appeal to the High Court—Held, that the claim of S against the land was prior to that of the defendant, 188.

the defendant to the extent of her (defendant's) mortgage, and she (defendant) would have been entitled to redeem the land by payment of the amount which might have been found due to S in her suit. The defendant being in possession of the land at the time of the institution of the suit of S, and her (defendant's) mortgage being registered, S must be regarded as having had notice of the defendant's claim, and was bound to make defendant a party to that suit in order to give a good title to a purchaser under such decree as might be made in that suit. S, by her omission to do so, did not

was not a party to the suit of S, and therefore not bound by the decree in it. The plaintiff accordingly was fully aware of the infirmity of the title which he was acquiring. No doubt, the decree in the suit of S bound the mortgagor A, who was a party to it, so far as his right to redeem was concerned. The plaintiff therefore had a good title to the interest of A, and was entitled to redeem the land from the defendant's mortgage. The utmost relief which the Court could afford to the plaintiff under the above circumstances was to permit him to amend his plaint by praying a redemption of the land from the defendant's mortgage, and to treat his suit, which was in the nature of an ejectment suit, as one for

On the 18th January 1877 the father of the plaintiffs purchased the interest of M in two houses at a sale in execution of a money-decree against M. The purchaser, however, never obtained possession, and he did not obtain the certificate of sale until the 31st July 1878. Subsequently to the sale of the 18th January 1877, two suits were filed against M on mortgages executed prior to that date and decrees in both were obtained against M. In execution of these decrees, both the houses were sold and the respective purchasers were represented by two of the defendants. The purchasers got possession and both obtained sale-certificates, one prior to the sale to the father of the plaintiffs, viz., on 5th February 1878, and the other subsequently, viz., 1st November 1878. The plaintiffs now sued to recover the houses. Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover as against the defendants. The plaintiffs, not having either got possession or obtained a certificate of sale at the date of the sale in execution of the decrees on the mortgages, had only an inchoate title. —Mortgage with guarantee.—Sale in execution of decree obtained by first mortgage.—Purchase by first mortgagee at such sale.—Bid by purchaser against second mortgage for guarantee.—Effect of second mortgage.—Redemption. In 1876 T executed a sale-mortgage of certain land to the plaintiff, and four years afterwards mortgaged the same land with guarantee to the defendant. In 1878 the plaintiff brought a suit against T and on upon the mortgage, obtained a decree, and he himself purchased the property at the Court's sale in execution of that decree. In attempting to take possession he was obstructed by the defendant, who was in possession of the property as mortgagee. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for possession. Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiff should satisfy the defendant's subsequent mortgage before he could recover possession. On an appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court—Held, reverse the lower Court's decree, that the plaintiff's claim should be allowed. The plaintiff having brought to sale, in execution of his decree, the estate as it stood at the date of his mortgage free from all subsequent incumbrances, the fact that he himself was the purchaser could not affect the estate which passed by that sale. As the defendant had not been a party to the plaintiff's suit against T, he was entitled to redeem the property if he wished.

for of Property Act (IT of 1882), ss. 17 (1), 55—Debt for money—Mortgage by conditional sale—Suits on mortgage—Concession of judgment followed by debt for possession—Elder of the money debt not a party—Sale is creation of money debt—Rights of auction-purchase. A judgment-debtor under a decree for money mortgaged certain property by a deed of conditional sale. The property mortgaged was attached as the property of the judgmentdebtor, and an order for sale was passed. Prior to the sale, however, the mortgagee having put their mortgage into suit, the judgment-debtor confessed judgment, admitted the mortgage debt, stated that he had no means to pay it, and asked that a decree for possession of the property might be passed in favour of the mortgagee; and a decree was so passed. To this suit the mortgagee, who were found to have had notice of the interest of the attaching judgment-creditor, never made him a party. Subsequently to the passing of the decree in the mortgagee's suit, the judgment-creditor under the money decree caused the property to be sold. The auction-purchaser was raised in obtaining possession, by the mortgagee, and thereupon sued them for possession. Held, that the auction-purchaser was entitled to a decree for possession on redeeming the mortgage. *Savitri Bai

The application was granted, and he sold the whole of the mortgaged property to Gurusantappa (father of the plaintiffs) for Rs. 1,534, which was duly paid to the decree-holder. Satisfaction of the decree was entered, and the Court confirmed the sale. Basappa (the second judgment-debtor) was in possession of a portion of the property, and he refused to give up possession alleging that he had separated from Yammappa and that the land in his possession had fallen to his share on separation, and contending that the sale by Yammappa to Gurusantappa was

The authority given to Yammappa under that section related only to his interest, but could not affect the interest of the other judgment-debtor (Basappa), who had not joined him in applying for leave to sell under that section. The appellants (plaintiffs), therefore, off the whole mortgage-debt with Gurusantappa's purchase-money, and had satisfied the decree. He

It was held that oral evidence for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties to the deeds was not admissible, being excluded by s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and the case had to be decided on a consideration of the documents themselves with only such extrinsic evidence of circumstances as might be required to show the relation of the written language to existing facts. Held, (i) that there were contained in the deeds indications that the parties intended to effect a mortgage by conditional sale.

Redemption was rendered applicable to a mortgage of this class by the effect of the Regulation XVII of 1806. The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 58, defines a mortgage of this character, stating the deposit; (b) the inclusion in the present security of a sum due on an account, open to be increased, other than the price fixed for the repurchase, and other matters. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, I. L. R. 12 All. 337 L. R. 17 I. A. 98, distinguished. BALKISHEN DAS v. LEOBE

13. ——— Suit for redemption—Conditional decree—Failure of mortgagor to pay in accordance with decree—Subsequent suit for redemption—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1952) s. 93 In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, a decree for redemption was passed conditional upon the plaintiff paying the defendants within a time specified a sum which was found still due to the latter, and the decree provided that, if such sum were not paid within the time specified, the suit should stand dismissed. The plaintiff failed to pay, and the suit accordingly stood dismissed. Subsequently he again sued for redemption, alleging that the mortgage-debt had now been satisfied from the usufruct. Held, having regard to the distinction between simple and usufructuary mortgages, that the decree in the former suit only decided that, in order to redeem and get possession of the property, the mortgagor must pay the sum then found to be due by him to the mortgagee, and did not operate as res judicata so as to bar a second suit for redemption, when, after further enjoyment of the profits by the mortgagee, the mortgagor could say that the debt had now become satisfied from the usufruct. Having regard to s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1952) in a suit brought by a usufructuary mortgagor for possession on the ground that the mortgage-debt has been satisfied from the usufruct, and in which the plaintiff is ordered to pay something because the debt has not been satisfied as alleged, the decree

In 1848 B and R mortgaged a piece of land to F. It was to be redeemed in eight years, or else to become the absolute property of the mortgagee. It was not redeemed; and in 1859 B, in whose name the land was entered in the Government records, executed a razinama in favour of F, and F passed a taluknama in favour of F, and F then became F's accepting the land. B and R then became F's tenants, and were, as such, successfully sued by B and R for rent in 1863. In 1872 F sold the land to Y, who again sold it to the defendant. The plaintiff, as purchaser from the original mortgagors (B and R) as purchaser from the original mortgagee (F and R) of their alleged equity of redemption, filed the present suit to redeem the property. Held, that, as the razinama given by F contained no reservation, and as it was accompanied by a transfer of possession, it had the effect of a conveyance of all the mortgagor's rights to the mortgagee. It operated to extinguish the equity of redemption, notwithstanding any misconception or ignorance on F's part of his rights as mortgagor. Under the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872, s. 21), error of law does not vitiate a contract; much less will it annul a conveyance after the lapse of many years unless there has been some fraud or

Subsequently defendant No 2 personally made a further loan to N, who executed two non-mortgage-deeds to him of the same property containing stipulations that these bonds should be paid before the mortgage of July 1877. N died, and his widow and heirs assigned the equity of redemption of the mortgage of July 1877 to the plaintiff, who sued the defendants to redeem. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was bound to pay off the two later bonds as well as the original mortgage-debt. Held, that the later loan by defendant No. 2 being a personal loan by him, the firm, as such, had no equity to insist on its being paid before the mortgage was redeemed, whatever right defendant No. 2 in his personal capacity might have. But in this suit, which was one to redeem the mortgage, he was a party as member of the firm, and not in his individual capacity, and he could not therefore resist the plaintiff's right to redeem on any ground based on the promise of the two bonds executed to himself. *CHHOTALAL GOVINDRAM v. s. 59—Civil Procedure Code (Act XII of 1859), s. 24 S, his son S D and his grandson the plaintiff D, son of a predeceased son, were undivided. In 1875 S mortgaged the property in dispute to H with possession. After S's death in 1877, S D managed the whole estate. In 1878, during D's absence from his native village, H sued S D as the heir and representative of S in respect of other debts and, obtaining a money-decree against him, attached the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. After the attachment, H, without notifying or disclosing his mortgage lien, caused several of the properties to be sold and, without obtaining

Courts found that the money-decree which H obtained and the execution-proceedings thereon bound the estate. It was contended that the execution-sale had not been objected to under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code and were therefore valid, and that the plaintiff consequently could not redeem. Held, that the plaintiff might redeem, although he had not taken proceedings under s. 294. The fact that the mortgagee H had sold the property in execution of a money-decree did not free him from the liability to be redeemed as mortgagee. The sale was rendered nugatory, not by the provisions of s. 294 (though permission to bid granted under that section might have validated the purchase), but by the impossibility of a mortgagee by such sales and purchases freeing himself from the liability to be redeemed. *MATTAND BALKRISHNA BHAT v. 92 In a suit by a mortgagor for redemption of a mortgage dated 17th March, 1891, a decree was passed in 1897, allowing him to redeem on payment of the mortgage-debt within a year from the date of the decree, but the decree did not contain any provision for foreclosure or sale in default of payment on the due date. The plaintiff having made default, the defendant applied to the Court for an order absolute for foreclosure or sale under s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). His application was rejected on the ground that, as the decree did not contain any clause for foreclosure or sale, s. 93 of the Act was not applicable. Held, in second appeal, that the defendant (mortgagee) was entitled to the remedy given by s. 93, although the decree was not drawn up as prescribed by s. 92. The omission of the Court to draw up the proper decree under s. 92 did not deprive the mortgagor of the relief provided by s. 93. MURLIDHAR v. PARASHARAH (1900) 1 L. R. 25 Bom. 101

70 ——— Limitation—Equity of redemption—Limitation—Adverse possession while period of redemption running—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 23 An equity of redemption, in common with other equitable estates in land, is capable of being extinguished by the operation of the Statute of Limitation. The interest in the property remaining in a mortgagor after the mortgage has been effected, commonly called the equity of redemption, may, in the case of an usufructuary mortgage, be extinguished by adverse possession on the part of a stranger while the mortgagee continues in possession and the period of redemption is still running. The word "possession," in s. 23 of the Limitation Act, embraces both actual possession and "possession in law," and the title to immovable property may be affected by s. 23 of the Limitation Act, although the physical possession of the property is not in question. An equity of redemption may with propriety be said to fall into possession or to be in the possession of the person legally entitled to it, although he may not be in the actual possession of the land. Continued possession of the mortgagee is not per se sufficient to keep alive the title of the mortgagor, but his title to redeem, and consequently to the ownership of the mortgaged property, is capable, notwithstanding such possession, of being extinguished by adverse possession for the required period. Held, upon the facts of the case, that the equity of redemption claimed by the plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession, inasmuch as a stranger received rent from the mortgagee in possession, and the stranger's possession was on his own behalf and as owner, and was quite inconsistent with the plaintiff's title. LALLA KANHOO LAL v. In 1872, a mortgaged certain land, with possession to S, to secure an advance of Rs100. The instrument of mortgage contained a covenant conferring upon the mortgagee a right of pre-emption in the following terms:—"If we assign our right over these properties to anyone, the land delivered possession of to you for appropriating the interest shall be assigned to you alone, and it shall not be assigned to anybody else. When we assign the land, we shall receive 50 fanams more from you, and then we shall assign the land for these two amounts together." In 1873, A sold his equity of redemption to P, and before 1897 P's interest was sold in execution of a decree against him, and bought by plaintiff. In 1897, plaintiff instituted this suit for redemption against the representative of S, the mortgagee, who pleaded in defence the right of pre-emption created in his favour by the mortgage deed, and contended that in consequence thereof the assignment to P and the subsequent purchase of P's interest by plaintiff were invalid. The defendant did not, however, bring the price fixed into Court. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to redeem. PER SUPREMACY, J.—Under the covenant, and by reason of a 54 of the Transfer of Property Act defendant had no interest in the property. His right could be no other than a right to specific performance available, under a 27 of the Specific Relief Act, against a transferee who had taken with notice of the covenant. But notice of a contract, such as is required to satisfy the section, must be notice of an existing obligation. Plaintiff was not a transferee who took with notice of the contract now sought to be enforced the time for the performance of which had long passed without anything being done, and the natural inference being that the right arose under it had been waived or otherwise discharged. Assuming that there was notice of the contract, and that it was otherwise a valid contract, defendant could not be allowed to use it as an answer to plaintiff's suit, inasmuch as no suit could now be brought to enforce the contract. PER BHASHAM ATTORNEY J.—The rule that a mortgagee may stipulate for the collateral advantage of pre-emption, if such advantage does not directly or indirectly "do the equity of redemption," is based upon the principle

But, by the terms of the stipulation under consideration, the mortgagee was entitled to exercise his option by paying, not the market price of the day or the price offered by a stranger, but the price to a price by the instrument of mortgage. However the occasion for exercising the right of pre-emption may arise, is oppressive and unconscionable. Where a right of pre-emption springs from contract it rests only upon a covenant which does not run with the land, and stands no higher than a contract of sale of immovable property, and does not of itself create an interest in, or charge on, the immovable property which is subject to the right of pre-emption. Until the contract is carried out by specific performance, either by act of parties or decree of Court, the pre-emptor acquires no title or interest in such property, which alone can distinguish the mortgagor's right of redemption, though he may have a right to call for a conveyance of the property. The equity of redemption in an usufructuary mortgage is an "intangible thing" within the meaning of a 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and its transfer by sale can be made only by registered instrument, even though its value may be less than Rs100. The equity of redemption in a simple mortgage may be treated as immovable property, and its sale can be effected if its value be less than Rs100, without a registered instrument, by mere delivery of the property. The right of a simple mortgagee in the property mortgaged is an intangible thing, within the meaning of a 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and a transfer by sale of hypothecation executed to secure a debt under R100 can be made only by a registered instrument. Subramaniam v Perumal Reddi, 1 L R 15 Mad 451, referred to. Inasmuch as the cause of action for specific performance had accrued in 1873, when the right of pre-emption had been infringed by the assignment of the equity of redemption, the right to enforce the right of pre-emption was barred. The fact that S had been in possession of the property as mortgagee could not save him from the operation of the law of limitation on his right to sue for specific performance of the contract of pre-emption. Krishna Menon v Kesavan, 1 L R 29 Mad 395, referred to. Quere Whether such a covenant for pre-emption transgresses the rule against perpetuities. RANASAMI PATTAR v CHINNAN ASANI (1901). Three out of the defendant partitioned the respective shares of the mortgaged land. Besides paying the defendant two-thirds of the sum due on the mortgage, they paid him R180-13-4, being two-thirds of a sum of R284-12-0, which he alleged he had been obliged to pay as assessment in respect of the mortgaged lands. Subsequently the plaintiff had purchased the whole of the lands comprised in the mortgage, and he now sued to redeem the one-third share which remained in mortgage. The defendant claimed to charge the plaintiff with one-third of the sum which he alleged the plaintiff had paid. The three mortgagors had severed their interests. deem the whole of the property still unredeemed, viz., a one anna eight pies share of the original mortgage. The defendant objected that the plaintiff could only redeem his own two pies share, which had become separated from the rest. The plaintiff denied that the estate had been divided. Held, that the plaintiff's claim being to redeem all that remained of the estate in the mortgagee's possession, the suit could not be maintained, unless all the other persons interested in the equity of redemption were before the Court either as co-plaintiffs or as defendants. Without their presence, the suit could not be properly disposed of, and the excuse, that the defendant did not take objection at the right time, had, under such circumstances, no validity. As owner of a two pies share, which by consent of all interested had become an estate wholly separated from the other parts of the original aggregate, the plaintiff would have been bound to set forth the transactions on which his right rested. RAGHO SALVI v. Within a year after notification of a petition for foreclosure a mortgagor deposited the principal debt, and interest for the last year of the mortgage term, which had expired. Interest for prior years of the term had not been paid; but this, according to the mortgagor's contention, was, by the terms of the condition, treated as a separate debt. Held, that as the mortgagor had not deposited the interest due on the sum lent, required, according to s. 7 of the Regulation, where, as here, the mortgagee had not obtained possession, and as the year of grace had expired, the conditional sale had become conclusive under s. 8, involving the dismissal of the mortgagor's suit for redemption. MANSHIRAM KHAN v. A decree for redemption which does not provide for payment of the mortgage-debt, within a fixed time, or for foreclosure in case of default, operates of itself as a foreclosure decree, if not executed within three years. On 12th November, 1888, A obtained a decree for redemption on payment of a certain sum of money to B (the mortgagee). —Proof of service—Beng. Reg. XVII of 1806, s. 8. The notice of foreclosure under s. 8, Regulation XVII of 1806, is not merely a preliminary proceeding leading up to a judgment of foreclosure to be subsequently pronounced in Court. It not only fixes the date from which the period during which the mortgagor is to retain the right to redeem is to be computed, but it is of itself the operative act in the foreclosure proceeding. The service of the notice therefore should be evidenced by the clearest proof, and should be in all cases, if not personal, at least such as to leave no doubt in the mind of the Court that the notice itself must have reached the hands or come to the knowledge of the mortgagors. *EUSUF ALI v. In 1874 the defendant (mortgagee) obtained a decree against the plaintiff upon the mortgage, ordering the plaintiff to pay the defendant the sum of £40; in default of payment, the defendant (mortgagee) to take possession of the land until the said sum should be paid. In pursuance of the said decree, the defendant took possession. The plaintiff brought the present suit to redeem the said land, alleging that the amount of the mortgage-debt had been fully liquidated out of the surplus profits of the land. Held, that the defendant (mortgagee) was not liable to account to the plaintiff for such profits. Under the former decree, the defendant was entitled to take possession, and retain it with the attendant benefits until the plaintiff should pay a definite sum which he had never paid. When the parties concerned, though in different relations, in a particular litigation are all before the Court, and their cases have been stated, the Court, if it finds the several causes as between plaintiff and the several defendants cannot properly or conveniently be tried together, should deal with them separately as suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring. Munsif's Court to recover several parcels of land from the defendant, plaintiff alleged that defendant held a valid mortgage of Rs. 206 on two parcels which he offered to redeem. As to the other parcels, he alleged that, if any charges had been created in defendant's favour over them by his predecessor in title, such charges were invalid. The suit, as valued by the plaintiff, was within the pecuniary limit of the Munsif's jurisdiction. Defendant pleaded that he held a mortgage for Rs. 3,000 over the land, and therefore the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The Munsif tried the question of the validity of the defendant's mortgage, and decreed possession to plaintiff on payment of Rs. 206 due on account of mortgages and Rs. 617-11-9 on account of improvements. Where a suit may be filed in more than one of several Courts, it is a general principle of law that the plaintiff may select the forum in which to bring the suit. Where a plaintiff sued in a District Munsif's Court, having jurisdiction at the place where the money due under a contract was to be paid, there being no Small Cause Court having jurisdiction at such place—Held, that the jurisdiction of the District Munsif was not ousted by the fact that there was in existence at the date of suit a Small Cause Court having jurisdiction at the place where the contract was made. in act of house-breaking by night in his house, and killed him with a kodah which he had called for, as he admitted, for that purpose. He was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge. The sentence being referred to the High Court for confirmation, it was held that the prisoner had been legally convicted of murder, that he had intentionally done to the deceased more harm than was necessary for any purpose of defence, and that not whilst deprived of power of self-control. But the sentence was mitigated to transportation for life, than which, it was held, no less sentence could be legally passed. The Judge, however, in a letter to Government, suggested the mitigation of the punishment, which was accordingly reduced to imprisonment for six months. REG. v. DURWAN GEER, 1 Ind. Jur. N. litica. The piecemeal examination of the testimony of individual witnesses without a broad view of the facts, circumstances and probabilities of a case generally leads to a failure of justice, especially in a case where most of the witnesses are drawn from a class of persons whose testimony is frequently unconvincing and not unfrequently unreliable. Even if witnesses in a case do not break down in cross-examination or contradict each other, yet if

who were in one way or other intimately connected with the transaction or the occurrence and the state of things immediately after, gives rise to the irresistible inference that if they were examined they would not have corroborated the prosecution story. *NIBARAN CHANDRA ROY v. The subscriptions were then, and continued to be, paid in rupees according to certain tables. On being admitted, a subscriber had to "promise and engage to submit to, and abide by the rules and bye laws of the Institution" (rule 22), and by rule 27 had to "pay a fee equal to ten member of the Society, who was admitted as a subscriber for the benefit of his widow in November 1871, for the benefit of his son in September 1873, and for the benefit of his daughter in November 1874. He commenced to pay an increased subscription for the benefit of his son in September 1878. He was not one of the majority who voted in favour of the rule of the 22nd May 1880, though he attended the meeting of subscribers. He died on the 25th June 1880, having up to that time duly paid his subscription to the Fund. In a suit in which the plaintiff, who were residing in England, claimed to be paid their pensions at the rate of two shillings in the rupee:—Held, that F had no vested interest at the time of the passing of the rule of the 22nd May 1880; that the plaintiffs were, with respect to their pensions, bound by the terms of that rule which a majority of the subscribers had full powers to correction under rule 60 by a majority of the subscribers. The Society being one for the equal benefit of all subscribers, even if rule 60 did not give power to adjust payments in accordance with the rate of exchange, such a power might be implied for the purpose of continuing the business of the Association. *FALLIE v. 3. ——— Rules of Benefit Society—Power to alter rules The Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund was a voluntary society established in 1850. Its object was to provide pensions for the widows of its members. One of its rules provided that the rules of the society were subject to such additions and alterations as might from time to time be sanctioned by the general body of subscribers, and by the form of application for admission as a member each applicant promised and engaged to abide by the rules of the society. The plaintiff became a member in 1875. At that time one of the rules (which had been passed in 1871) provided that the pensions of widows resident in Europe should be payable to them at the rate of 2s. per rupee. On the 20th July 1895 the society passed a new rule which provided that all pensions due or becoming due after the 31st July 1895 should be paid to incumbents residing in Europe or the colonies at the market rate of exchange on the day of remittance. The plaintiff contended that the society was not competent to alter the rule passed in 1871 by which he had been induced to join the society, and he prayed for a declaration that his wife, if and when she became a widow, would be entitled to have her pension paid at par. Held, dismissing the suit, that the society was competent to alter its rules and that the plaintiff was bound by such altered rules. The contract with the plaintiff was that his widow, if he left one, should receive such pension as the rules prescribed, and that the rules were liable to alteration by a majority at a general
